WAR SUMMARY OF THE LATEST EVENTS

There is no cessation in the great struggle on the western front. The midnight French official report stated that "fighting continued all day on the heights between Souchez and Vimy," and that the French troops there hold all the new positions captured. This, supplementing the afternoon report, which stated that early yesterday morning the French advance had reached Hill 140, the culminating ridge of the Vimy plateau, would indicate that the French to the southwest of Lens have won all the ridges which command that town, and will be able from them to bring an overwhelming fire to bear on the German lines on the plain between Vimy and Lens. To the north of the town also the British are battering the German lines with artillery, and Sir John French expresses the hope that his army will be able to push the immediate success to a really decisive issue. The object of the combined attack in this quarter is to capture Lens and La Bassée, the outer positions in the German system of defence, by which they hold Lille and the adjacent industrial centres of Roubaix and Turcoing. The region is the manufacturing heart of France, and in the district over which the advance of the Allies is now taking place are located the most important collieries and blast furnaces of the country. If the advance is pushed another mile to the east the evacuation of Lens will become a necessity. That in turn may involve the collapse of the entire German defensive system in the Lille district.

In Champagne the French report says there was a struggle of constant violence before the positions to which the Germans had fallen back, and also an action to reduce a salient north of Mesnil, where some German detachments still hold out. Many prisoners are being taken in actions of this sort. Near Massiges, in an isolated German position, a thousand men were captured. The French there have now gone on to the north. They are also making progress on the slopes of the Tanne Hill.

It is clear that general Joffre contemplates further offensive operations of the greatest importance, the success of which depends upon the measure of secrecy with which preparations can be made. Official announcement was made at Paris last night that by request of the military authorities the Franco-Swiss frontier has been closed to all travellers seeking to leave France. No letters, telegrams, parcels or anything else in which information might be conveyed will be permitted to cross the border. The delay is not expected to exceed 48 hours. The only means by which the Germans can learn what is happening in France is by aeroplanes scouting and by the operations of spies. If, however, troops are being concentrated for another big drive the work will be done by night, and spying will be a very unhealthy occupation in France for a few days if it involves an attempt to pass through the Allies' the waters of the Tigris Sir Her Rawlison discovered the remains of a quay built in the time of Nebuchadnezzar, and bearing his inscription. During its "golden prime" under Harun-al-Rashid as the capital of Islamic world it had a population of about 2,000,000 people. There may be 120,000 of a population in the city now.

In the Northern Isonzo region around Tolmino the Italians are pressing the Austrians back on the Monfalcone positions. On Tuesday night they expelled the Austrians from the forts on the road to Tolmino, took 60 prisoners and two machine guns.

Many rumors come from the Balkans but little authentic news. The Serbians await with confidence the threatened invasion. It is reported that the Allies have definitely offered to 150,000 British, French and Italian troops into Macedonia to co-operate with the Greek and Serbian arm should the Germanic powers indicate the Bulgars to take their side. As the Serbs have almost half a million men and the Greeks 350,000, this would provide an allied army of at least a million to face the Germanic onslaught and the Bulgar flank movement. It is difficult to see where the Germans and Austrians are to find enough men to overcome this combination.

SOLDIERS FOR NAPANEE

At the council meeting on Friday night last a letter to Mayor Gibbs from Mr. Ed. W. Grange was read stating that there was a good prospect of securing for Napanee the presence of two or three companies of soldiers during the winter months.

Mr. Grange wrote that he had taken the matter up with the Minister of Militia and with Col. A. P. Deroche who has charge of the plans for winter quarters of the troops in training in Canada.

The new Armouries will accommodate from 250 to 350 men and it is probable that Napanee will be selected as one of the winter training depots. The town council passed a resolution requesting the Minister of Militia, Sam Hughes, to favorably consider the proposal and offering to supply free water and free light for the armouries during the winter.

The presence of 300 soldiers in town from November to March would be a splendid business asset as it would mean an extra expenditure among the business men of from $500 to $800 a day.

NAPANEE TO HAVE SOLDIER TRAINING.

Ottawa, Sept. 27.—Plans for the winter quarters of the 45,000 to 50,000 troops who will be in training in Canada this winter were approved by the Militia Council this afternoon. The work of fitting up the various buildings selected is now being rushed under the direction of Lieut.-Col. A. Deroche, Director of Works and Buildings, and by the middle of next month most of the men will be comfortably settled for the winter, either in the various completed armouries or other large suitable buildings acquired by the department.

Temporary cooking and sleeping accommodation will be established

Official announcement was made at Paris last night that by request of the military authorities the Franco-Swiss frontier has been closed to all travellers seeking to leave France. No letters, telegrams, parcels or anything else in which information might be conveyed will be permitted to cross the border. The delay is not expected to exceed 48 hours. The only means by which the Germans can learn what is happening in France is by aeroplanes scouting and by the operations of spies. If, however, troops are being concentrated for another big drive the work will be done by night, and spying will be a very unhealthy occupation in France for a few days if it involves an attempt to pass through the Allies' lines. The word must wait and see what the closing of the frontier means.

The French war office is authority for the statement that since last Friday the German effective force on the western front has been reduced to the extent of 120,000 men in killed, wounded and prisoners, the latter numbering now over 23,000. As the military critics have been estimating the number of Germans on the western battle-line as slightly under rather than over two millions, this is a loss of six per cent. in less than a week's fighting. It would not take many weeks at that rate to use up Germany's reserves, which are becoming very scarce.

From the eastern front comes an admission by the German Staff that the Vilna encircling movement has been abandoned, and that the last German troops engaged in it have been recalled. The announcement is in these words: "After having effectively supported the operations of General von Eichhorn by advancing against the flank of the enemy our cavalry left the district near and east of Vileika. The enemy remained inactive west of Vileika." As Vileika is about sixty miles almost due east of Vilna, and as the Russian front is admittedly west of Vileika, it may be assumed that the great Vilna drive which was to carry the Germans into the heart of Russia actually did carry them from a point about 10 miles west of Vilna to a point about five miles east, and stopped there.

The entire strength of the German army in the Baltic provinces is still being devoted to the advance on Dvinsk and Riga. Von Hindenburg claims that he has now reached Lake Swenton, a small body of water south of Dvinsk, and about ten miles from the Dwina. The German advance is by frontal attack over marshy land, in which the Russians have prepared line after line of trenches, and the loss of men is terrific. The German losses are being made good, no doubt, by drawing from the armies of Prince Leopold and Von Mackensen farther south. These armies are at present inactive.

The British advance up the Tigris and the decisive defeat of the Turks at Kut-el-Amara, 150 miles down the river from Bagdad, are events of real importance. General Nixon's latest despatch indicates that he is pressing on to Bagdad, the ancient capital of the Saracenic Caliphs before the Turk came in touch with the Islam. The occupation of Bagdad by a British army will be spoken of in every bazaar in the East as another evidence of the power of the King-Emperor and of the decadence of the Turk. As the upper reaches of the Tigris are approached the provisioning of the Anglo-Indian army by the water route will become more difficult, but General Nixon will push on north, and the Russians who are now near Van will come south till a junction is made. Then the sweep across Kurdistan will begin, with Constantinople as the distant objective.

Bagdad will be the seat of Government of Mesopotamia under British rule, and the Arabs and Jews, who constitute the largest elements of population, will be glad to see the last of the Turk. Bagdad was one of the chief cities of Babylonia. Beneath

GRAND JURY'S PRESENTMENT:

To the Honourable Justice Middleton: Judge of the Supreme Court, held in the Town of Napanee, in the County of Lennox and Addington, commencing Tuesday, September the 28th, 1915.

We, the Grand Jurors, beg leave to report as follows:

We have visited the gaol and county buildings and find them kept in a satisfactory condition. We find five persons in the gaol, four men and one woman, and they express themselves as perfectly satisfied with the treatment they receive. We would recommend that the three closets in the men's ward be enclosed or screened. We visited the public schools and collegiate institute and find them well kept and sanitary. Their fire drill must have been efficient as shown by the fact that when the fire alarm was sounded the West Ward school was entirely cleared of pupils in forty-five seconds, and the collegiate in about the same time. The sanitary conditions are satisfactory except the boys and girls are all compelled to drink from two common drinking cups, and the boys all use one towel, and the girls the same. This could be remedied by having sanitary paper towels instead of the common linen towels.

Finally we congratulate Your Lordship upon your apparent good health, and trust that you may long be spared to add grace and dignity to the bench.

CHANGES IN COMMAND.

Lieut.-Col. Garnet Hughes Succeeds Mercer, Who is Promoted.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Some interesting changes in the composition of commands of the Canadian Arm Corps which is now in France were announced last night in a cable from Gen. Alderson, commanding the arm corps, to Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia.

A reserve corps over and above the two regular divisions has been formed, by the authority of Sir John French. These include Col. C. J. Smart's cavalry brigade, the 42nd Montreal Highlanders under Col. Cantlie, the 49th Edmonton Battalion under Col. Griesbach, and the Royal Canadian Regiment under Col. McDonnell. The command of this force will be given to Brigadier-General Mercer, who formerly commanded with great credit the 1st Canada Brigade. The place of Gen. Mercer will be taken by Lieut.-Col. Garnet Hughes, formerly Brigade-Major of the 16th Highlanders. Col. Hughes who won his D.S.O. after St. Julien is a son of Gen. Sir Sam Hughes.

The promotion of his son to 1st Brigadier-General came as a surprise to Sir Sam Hughes, and General Alderson notes in his cable that the promotion was made solely because it was especially well merited, and was not suggested in any way by the Canadian Minister of Militia.

CANADIANS NOT IN IT.

Battle in Flanders Probably Soon Distance South of Positions.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—No word has been received at the Militia Department as to whether the Canadians were in action Saturday or Sunday. General Hughes, however, stated that from the despatches, as he read them, it would not appear that the Dominion's khaki-clad sons had been the thick of the fighting so far. The only line in the reports which might refer to them was one in which action had been described as taking place south of the Menin road, but the whole it is considered that unless their position has been changed they have not yet been in the forefront of the new fighting.

Unless the Canadians have been moved, the position of the battle, considerably south of that part of the line which they are holding. No message has been received in any case referring to their having been engaged.

STRIDE IS SHORTER.

Teuton Drive on Eastern Front is Perceptibly Weaker.

PETROGRAD, Sept. 28.—The German aggressive on the eastern front has become noticeably weaker during the past few days. With the increasing extent of their penetration of Russian territory, the impetuous strides with which the Germans for a time made fast headway against the Russians, carrying everything before them, have been gradually shortening up.

General Ivanoff apparently is determined to hold back the Austro-Germans, and his efforts are meeting with a considerable measure of success. The fortress triangle, which includes Dubno, Rovno, and Lutsk, is almost entirely in the possession of the Russians. Reports show that the prisoners captured in the Lutsk district numbered 128 officers and about 8,000 men, not eighty officers and 4,000 men as stated in the preliminary estimates.

Fighting in Riga District.

The Russian official war statement given out on Saturday night says:

"The cannonade in the Riga region has become much more intense in places, the Germans using asphyxiating shells.

"A fierce battle has been fought along the whole front of the Dvinsk positions between the Dvina and Lake Drisviaty, where the Germans, supported by the hurricane fire of their artillery, delivered repeated desperate attacks, all of which were repulsed. Certain trenches changed hands frequently.

"During one counter-attack a Russian detachment in the heat of the fight was surrounded by Germans, but cut its way out and joined the other troops."

OVER IN 20 MINUTES.

French Infantry Completed Victory in Short Order.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—Reports from the front say that only twenty minutes was required for the French infantry to complete the victory prepared for by sixty hours of violent shelling and overrun the first line of the German trenches north of Perthes in Champagne. While awaiting the moment for the attack the French soldiers rested behind their lines, joking and putting their arms in perfect order.

The bright glow from the slow-burning illuminating rockets and the glare of exploding projectiles lighted up the entire zone of action during two nights.

"After a few hours of intense fire, our hopes that our batteries were dominating the situation were transformed to certain conviction," says a wounded officer who took part in the battle. "The moment for the attack was set for dawn, when the charge was sounded. Whole battalions, reinforced by reserves, bounded forward. The rush was so impetuous that the Germans still alive and unwounded in the battered works seemed dazed and unable to resist. They were disarmed and pushed back for our reserves to pick up, while the attacking line went on.

"There was little or no musketry. The bayonets did most of the work. The proportion of dead to wounded and prisoners was large. What was left of entire companies threw up their hands at the sight of the deadly execution by the Zouaves."

Allies Are Now in Front of Enemy's Second Line.

Terrific Battle on Western Front Goes on Without Cessation—British and French Troops Have Repulsed a Number of Violent Counter Attacks—Many Pieces of Artillery Captured.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The German armies which were driven back Saturday and Sunday by the great offensive of the French and British forces against both sides of the elbow joint of the German positions on the western front caught their breath overnight, and reinforced by bodies of fresh troops, turned upon their victors with might and main, but without avail. Each German counter-attack was driven back, many of them at the point of the bayonet, some by tornadoes of machine gun fire, and last night the extensive defences which were captured Sunday were still in French and British hands, and progress had been made by the allies both in Champagne and east of Loos.

In Champagne the French troops are now drawn up solidly before the second line of German defence works over a front of 15 miles, and are apparently waiting only for the artillery to do its work of destruction before making another jump forward. In Artois the situation is the same.

Last night's War Office bulletin says:

"Northwest of Hulluch we have repulsed a number of counter attacks and inflicted heavy loss on the enemy. East of Loos our offensive is progressing.

"Our captures now amount to 53 officers and 2,800 men, and 18 guns and 32 machine guns. The enemy abandoned a considerable quantity of material, which has not yet been classified."

Battle Goes On.

PARIS, Sept. 28.—The text of last night's official communication follows:

"To the north of Arras the situation is without modification. The enemy has reacted only feebly against the new positions occupied by our troops. The number of prisoners taken in that region exceeds 1,500.

"In Champagne the battle continues without cease. Our troops are at present on a front taken before the second position of the German defence, marked by Hill No. 185, to the west of the Navarrin Farm, the Souain hillock, the tree of Hill No. 193, and the village and hillock of

MISSING LINKS.

Pages of Geological History That Nature Has Destroyed.

New details are continually being added by geologists to the known history of the earth, including the development of plants and animals. However, that history, which is recorded in the rocks, is still fragmentary, like a badly mutilated book. One of the great defects in the record in the Atlantic and gulf coastal plain regions of this country is the absence of the later part of the cretaceous and the early part of the eocene chapters—perhaps eight to ten millions years ago. A report by the geological survey discusses this missing part of the record and shows that the break must cover a very long period of time.

It is known that at that time the continents were at least as large as and probably larger than they are now, and the oceans were accordingly smaller. Any rocks that were then formed in the sea seem to have been weathered and washed away. Hundreds of kinds of plants and animals that lived before and hundreds that lived after this great period are known, but not one which lived during the period. Strange to say, few if any of the species which existed before the unknown period lived through it.

It is like a play in which the places of one act remain the same as in the preceding but the characters are all new, and yet many of the new players resemble the old ones so much that one is compelled to admit that they are close relatives. In each of the states bordering the Atlantic ocean are layers of rock which were formed before and after the period whose record is missing. In these layers are entombed sea shells of many kinds, but apparently not one species lived through from cretaceous to eocene time.

BECKONING THE DEAD.

The Call of the Indians to Which the Sea Responded.

On the rugged coast of Washington by the Copalis sands there is a tower from which the Indians watch for sea otter. They are very eager after that game, for the hide of one of those creatures is worth all the way from $500 to $2,000. Two young Indians were watching one day when they saw a sea otter off in the surf. Two shots from their rifles killed the otter, and then they rushed down to their surfboat. The sea was heavy, and when they were out some distance from the shore their boat broke in two over a comb, and the men were thrown into the sea.

CHANGES IN COMMAND.

Lt.-Col. Garnet Hughes Succeeds Mercer, Who is Promoted.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—Some interesting changes in the composition and commands of the Canadian Army corps which is now in France were announced last night in a cable from Gen. Alderson, commanding the army corps, to Gen. Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia.

A reserve corps over and above the regular divisions has been formed, by the authority of Sir John Alderson. These include Col. C. A. Macartney's cavalry brigade, the 42nd Central Highlanders under Col. Macartney, the 49th Edmonton Battalion under Col. Griesbach, and the Royal Canadian Regiment under Col. Macartney. The command of this force will be given to Brigadier-General Mercer, who formerly commanded the 16th Highlanders. Col. Hughes, who won his D.S.O. after St. Julien, a son of Gen. Sir Sam Hughes. The promotion of his son to be Brigadier-General came as a surprise to Sir Sam Hughes, and General Alderson notes in his cable that the promotion was made solely because it was especially well merited, and was not suggested in any way by the military Minister of Militia.

CANADIANS NOT IN IT.

Little in Flanders Probably Some Distance South of Positions.

OTTAWA, Sept. 28.—No word has been received at the Militia Department as to whether the Canadians are in action Saturday or Sunday. General Hughes, however, stated that from the despatches, as he read them, would not appear that the Dominion's khaki-clad sons had been in the thick of the fighting so far. The only line in the reports which might refer to them was one in which action had been described as taking place south of the Menin road, but on the whole it is considered that unless their position has been changed they have not yet been in the forefront of a new fighting.

Unless the Canadians have been moved, the position of the battle is considerably south of that part of the line which they are holding. No message has been received in any case referring to their having been engaged.

ENEMY DEAD BEAT.

Theq Seem Crushed and Exhausted, Says British Officer.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—The first of the wounded from the victory in Flanders reached London Sunday night. One of their number, an officer with shrapnel wounds in his head and shoulder, talking of the action to The London Daily Mail representative, said: "Things are beginning to hum at last. On Friday it really began. We had the usual dose of heavy artillery all day. On Saturday morning early under a hurricane of shrapnel the move started with short, sharp rushes. The German trenches were at a distance of about 400 yards. Our fellows went at it with rare spirit."

"There was some pretty business with the bayonet, and the prisoners, plenty of them with their 'Kamerad' cries, were very ready to throw down their rifles and all their equipment in their eagerness to be captured. That was the most surprising thing of the whole business. Many of them were old men of the Landsturm and Landwehr, but there was plenty of young blood among them as well. They seemed crushed and exhausted, no go in them, and seemed to welcome the chance of surrender. They were practically dead beat, with nothing but 'Kamerad' or some such phrase to say."

LONDON, Sept. 28.—James Keir Hardie, the noted British labor leader, died to-day at Glasgow, Scotland, of pneumonia. He was 59 years of age.

Mr. Hardie had one of the most interesting careers of all the men in public life in Great Britain in the last thirty years. He was born in Scotland, and began life as a coal miner's helper when he was seven years old. He worked in coal mines until his 24th year, giving up his spare time to study. He became a figure of prominence in the organization of coal miners and then entered politics. He was elected to the House of Commons in 1892, but failed of re-election at the next poll. He was elected again in 1900, and had held his seat since then continuously.

Greatest Success on Western Front Since War Began, Says Mail.

LONDON, Sept. 28.—Commenting on the decided results gained by the allies in their latest offensive on the western front, The London Daily Mail editorially says:

"No such successes have been gained on the western front since the war began. Such hours of noble joy this nation has not known since the closing years of the desperate struggle with Napoleon. . . . Lloyd George told us that if we had had the guns and shells we should have been in Germany long before now. We must be in Germany if we are to dictate the peace we want. Only a nation in arms can defeat decisively that nation in arms."

One of the Indians drifted ashore on a piece of wreckage. The other, although a splendid swimmer, was drowned. The news soon spread to the reservation, and the Indians from far and near came to the beach and stood on the sands, silently beckoning to the sea to give up its dead.

It was a solemn, impressive sight—the stalwart, rugged, copper colored men and women standing at the verge of the sea foam asking the sea by the motion of their hands to send the body ashore. For three days they waited and beckoned, and then a dark object was seen drifting into shallow water. Sometimes it was buried completely from view by the heavy surf; then it was seen again a little nearer, and so the body of the dead Indian came ashore at the call of his tribesmen.—Youth's Companion.

The First Great Bank.

The first great bank in the world was the bank of Venice, established in 1157 when the queen city of the Adriatic was the head of the commerce of the western world. At that time the great current of the trade between Europe and Asia passed through the Persian gulf and the Red sea to Alexandria, Egypt, and was carried in ships across the Mediterranean sea and through the Adriatic to Venice, where it was distributed to various parts of Europe. Venice was a sort of autocratic republic, founded and supported by its merchants, who were famed throughout the world for their wealth and reliability. They founded their bank, which was guaranteed by the government and was held in high credit in all the great cities on the routes of trade.

SYNOPSIS.

Sanford Quest, master criminologist of the world, finds that in bringing to justice Macdougall, the murderer of Lord Ashleigh's daughter, he has but just entered a life-and-death struggle with a mysterious master criminal. In a hidden hut in Professor Ashleigh's garden he has seen an anthropoloid ape skeleton and a living inhuman creature, half monkey, half man, destroyed by fire. In his rooms at intervals have appeared from nowhere two black boxes with sarcastic and threatening notes signed with a pair of armless, threatening hands, representing those which have already figured in a diamond robbery. With his secretary, Laura, and his assistant, Lenora, he follows the trail of Macdougall, who escaped on his way to prison, and finds Macdougall's dead body in a cave on a lonely hillside. After a thrilling escape from two thugs who try to kill him he returns to his rooms to find his valet, Ross Brown, and a Miss Quigg murdered, and Police Inspector French investigating. French, puzzled, half suspects Quest of the crime.

ON THE RACK.

CHAPTER XII.

For the moment a new element had been introduced into the horror of the little tableau. All eyes were fixed upon Quest, who listened to the inspector's dubious words with a supercilious smile upon his lips.

"Perhaps," he suggested "you would like to ask me a few questions?"

"Perhaps I may feel it my duty to do so," the inspector replied gravely. "In the first place, then, Mr. Quest, will you kindly explain the condition of your clothes?"

Quest shrugged his shoulders.

"Here you are, then," he replied. "This morning I decided to make an attempt to clear up the mystery of Macdougall's disappearance. I sent on my secretary, Miss Laura, to make friends with the section boss, and Lenora and I went out by automobile a little later. We instituted a search on a new principle, and before very long we found Macdougall's body. That's one up against you, I think, inspector."

"Very likely," the inspector observed. "Go on, please."

"I left the two young ladies, at Miss Lenora's wish, to superintend the removal of the body. I myself had an engagement to deliver over her jewels to Mrs. Rheinholdt here at mid-day. I returned to where my automobile was waiting, started for the city and was attacked by two thugs near the section house. I got away from them, ran to the tower house to try and stop the freight, was followed by the thugs, and jumped out on to the last car from the signal arm."

"Where is your automobile?"

"No idea," Quest replied. "I left it in the road. When I jumped from the freight car I took a taxicab to the professor's and called for him, as arranged."

when he told French he was looking up the one man who could clear up the whole show."

Lenora nodded thoughtfully.

"The professor spoke up like a man," she agreed, "but Laura, I want to ask you something. Did you notice his servant—that man Craig?"

"Can't say I did particularly," Laura admitted.

"Twice," Lenora continued, "I thought he was going to faint. I tell you he was scared the whole of the time."

"What are you getting at, kid?" Laura demanded.

"At Craig, if I can," Lenora replied, moving toward the telephone. "Please give me the phototelephone. I am going to talk to the professor."

Laura adjusted the mirror to the instrument and Lenora rang up. The professor himself answered the call.

"Have you seen the three o'clock edition, professor," Lenora asked.

"I never read newspapers, young lady," the professor replied.

"Let me tell you what they say about Mr. Quest!"

Lenora commenced a rambling account of what she had read in the newspaper. All the time the eyes of the two girls were fixed upon the mirror. They could see the professor seated in his chair with two huge volumes by his side, a pile of manuscript, and a pen in his hand. They could even catch the look of sympathy on his face as he listened attentively. Suddenly Lenora almost broke off. She gripped Laura by the arm. The door of the study had been opened slowly, and Craig, carrying a bundle, paused for a moment on the threshold. He glanced nervously toward the professor, who seemed unaware of his entrance. Then he moved stealthily toward the fireplace, stooped down and committed something to the flames. The relief on his face, as he stood up, was obvious.

"All I can do for Mr. Quest, young lady, I will," the professor promised.

He laid the receiver down and the

"Isn't that evidence?" she demanded. "Let's ring up Inspector French!" Laura shook her head doubtfully. "Not so fast," she advised. "French is a good sort in his way, but he's prejudiced just now against the boss. I'm not sure that this evidence would go far by itself."

"It's evidence enough for us to go to Craig, though! What we have got to do is to get a confession out of him, somehow!"

Laura studied her companion, for a moment, curiously.

"Taking some interest in Mr. Quest, kid, ain't you?"

Lenora looked up. Then her head suddenly sank into her hands. She knew quite well that her secret had escaped her. Laura patted her shoulder.

"That's all right, child," she said soothingly. "We'll see him through this, somehow or other."

"Laura," exclaimed Lenora, "we will save Mr. Quest and we will get hold of Craig! I have a plan. Listen!"

CHAPTER XIII.

Craig's surprise was real enough as he opened the back door of the professor's house on the following morning and found Lenora standing on the threshold.

Lenora smiled pleasantly.

"I came to this door," she said, "because I wanted a little talk with you."

Craig's attitude was perfect. He was mystified but he remained respectful.

"Will you come inside?" he invited.

She shook her head.

"I am afraid," she confided, "of what I am going to say being overheard. Come with me down to the garage for a moment."

He opened the doors of the garage, leaving the keys in the lock, and they both passed inside.

"You can say what you please here without the slightest fear of being overheard, miss," Craig remarked.

Lenora nodded, and breathed a prayer to herself. She was nearer the door than Craig by about half a dozen paces. Her hand groped in the little bag she was carrying and gripped something hard. She clenched her teeth for a moment. Then the automatic pistol flashed out through the gloom.

"Craig," she threatened, "if you move I shall shoot you."

It seemed as though the man were a coward. He began to tremble, his lips twitched, his eyes grew larger and rounder.

"What is it?" he faltered. "What do you want?"

"Just this," Lenora said firmly. "I suspect you to be guilty of the crime for which Sanford Quest is in prison. I am going to have you questioned. If you are innocent you have nothing to fear. If you are guilty there will be someone here before long who will extract the truth from you."

The man's face was an epitome of terror. Even his knees shook. Lenora felt herself grow calmer with every moment.

"I am going outside to send a message," she told him. "I shall return presently."

"Don't go," he begged suddenly.

"Don't leave me! I am innocent. I have done nothing wrong. If you keep me here, you will do more harm than you can dream of."

"It is for other people to decide about your innocence," Lenora said dead easy. Then let me in the take my clothes and leave me here. Quest followed the scheme in mind quickly.

"It is all right," he decided, "but am not at all sure that they can rehold me on the evidence they have got. If they can't, I shall be doing self more harm than good in way."

"It's no use unless you can get 1 of Craig quickly," Laura said. "H getting the scares, as it is."

"I'll do it," Quest decided. "Call guard, Laura."

She obeyed. The man came g naturally toward them.

Quest looked at him steadfast through the bars.

The inspector nodded.

"I shall have to ask you to excuse me for a moment," he said, "while I ring up number ten signal tower. If Mr. Quest's story receives corroboration the matter is at an end."

The inspector left the room almost immediately.

When he returned he was looking graver than ever.

"Quest," he announced, "your alibi is useless—in fact, a little worse than useless. The operator at number ten has been found murdered at the back of the tower!"

Quest started.

"I ought not to have left him to those thugs," he murmured regretfully.

"There is no automobile of yours in the vicinity," the inspector continued, "nor any news of it. I think it will be as well now, Quest, for this matter to take its obvious course. Will you, first of all, hand over her jewels to Mrs. Rheinholdt?"

Quest drew the keys of the safe from his pocket, crossed the room and swung open the safe door. For a moment afterwards he stood transfixed. His arm, half outstretched, remained motionless. Then he turned slowly around.

"The jewels have been stolen," he announced with unnatural calm.

The inspector laid his hand heavily upon Quest's shoulder.

"You will kindly consider yourself under arrest, Quest. Ladies and gentlemen, will you clear the room now, if you please. The ambulance I telephoned for is outside."

The professor, who had been looking as though dazed, suddenly intervened.

"Mr. French," he said earnestly, "I am convinced that you are making a great mistake. In arresting and taking away Mr. Quest you are removing from us the one man who is likely to be able to clear up this mystery."

The inspector pushed him gently to one side.

"You will excuse me, professor," he said, "but this is no matter for argument. If Mr. Quest can clear himself, no one will be more glad than I."

Quest shrugged his shoulders.

"The inspector will have his little joke," he observed dryly. "It's all right, girls. Keep cool," he went on, as he saw the tears in Lenora's eyes.

"Come round and see me in the Tombs, one of you."

The ambulance men came and departed with their grim burden, the room on the ground floor was locked and sealed, and the house was soon empty except for the two girls. Toward three o'clock Lenora went out and returned with a newspaper. She opened it out upon the table and they both pored over it.

"Justice Thorpe has refused to consider bail! He's a guy, that Justice Thorpe, and so's the idiot who wrote this stuff!" Laura exclaimed, thrusting the paper away from her. "I guess the professor was dead right reflection on the mirror faded away. Lenora started up and hastily put on her coat and hat, which were still lying on the chair.

"I am going right down to the professor's," she announced.

"What do you think you can do there?" Laura asked.

"I am going to see if I can find out what that man burned," she replied. "I will be back in an hour."

Laura walked with her as far as the street car, and very soon afterward Lenora found herself knocking at the professor's front door. Craig admitted her almost at once. For a moment he seemed to shiver as he recognized her.

"Well, young lady," the professor said, "have you thought of something I can do?"

She took no notice of the chair to which he pointed, and rested her hand upon his shoulder.

"Professor," she begged, "go and see Mr. Quest! He is in the Tombs prison. It would be the kindest thing anyone could possibly do."

The professor glanced regretfully at his manuscript, but he did not hesitate. He rose promptly to his feet.

"If you think he would appreciate it, I will go at once," he decided.

Her face shone with gratitude.

"That is really kind of you, professor," she declared.

"I will send for my coat and we will go together, if you like," he suggested. She smiled.

"I am going the other way, back to Georgia square," she explained. "No, please don't ring. I can find my own way out."

She hurried from the room. Outside in the hall she paused for a moment, listening with beating heart. By the side wall was a hat rack with branching pegs, from which several coats were hanging. She slipped quietly behind their shelter.

A moment or two later she heard the professor leave the house. Very cautiously she stole out from her hiding place. The hall was empty. She crossed it with noiseless footsteps, slipped into the study and moved stealthily to the fireplace. There was a little heap of ashes in one distinct spot. She gathered them up in her handkerchief and secreted it in her dress and quietly left the house.

At Georgia square she found Laura waiting for her, and a few minutes afterward the two girls were examining the ashes with the aid of Quest's microscope. Among the little pile was one fragment at the sight of which they both exclaimed. It was distinctly a shred of charred muslin embroidery. Lenora pointed toward it triumphantly.

"It is for other people to decide about your innocence," Lenora said calmly. "I have nothing to do with that. If you are wise you will stop here quietly."

"Have you said anything to Mr. Ashleigh, miss?" the man asked piteously.

"Not a word."

A expression of relief shone for a moment upon his face. Lenora pointed to a stool.

"Sit down there and wait quietly," she ordered.

He obeyed without a word. She left the place, locked the door securely, and made her way round to the other side of the garage—the side hidden from the house. Here, at the far corner, she drew a little pocket wireless from her bag and set it on the window sill. Very slowly she sent her message:

I have Craig here in the professor's garage, locked up. If our plan has succeeded, come at once. I am waiting for you.

There was no reply. She sent the message again and again. Suddenly, during a pause, there was a little flash upon the plate. A message was coming to her. She transcribed it with beating heart:

O. K. Coming.

The guard swung open the wicket in front of Quest's cell.

"Young woman to see you, Quest," he announced. "Ten minutes, and no loud talking, please."

Quest moved to the bars. It was Laura who stood there. She wasted very little time in preliminaries. Having satisfied herself that the guard was out of hearing, she leaned as close as she could to Quest.

"Look here," she said, "Lenora's crazy with the idea that Craig has done these jobs—Craig, the professor's servant, you know. We used the phototelegraph yesterday afternoon and saw him burn something in the professor's study. Lenora went up straight away and got hold of the ashes."

"Smart girl," Quest murmured, nodding approvingly. "Well?"

"There are distinct fragments," Laura continued, "of embroidered stuff such as the Salvation Army girl might have been wearing. We put them on one side, but they ain't enough evidence. Lenora's idea is that that you should get hold of Craig and hypnotize him into a confession."

"That's all right," Quest replied, "but how am I to get hold of him?"

Laura glanced once more carelessly around to where the guard stood.

"Lenora's gone up to the professor's again this afternoon. She is going to try and get hold of Craig and lock him in the garage. If she succeeds, she will send a message by wireless at three o'clock. It is half-past two now."

"Well?" Quest exclaimed. "Well?"

"You can work this guard, if you want to," Lenora went on. "I have seen you tackle worse cases. He seems to be blundering along with the blanket up to her chin.

"How long will he stay like this?" she whispered, pointing to the war who was sitting on the floor with arms folded and his eyes closed.

"Half an hour or so," Quest answered. "Don't bother about him. He shall drop the key back through the window."

Quest reached Georgia square five minutes to three. A glance and down assured him that the house was unwatched. He let himself in with his own key, threw Lau clothes off, and, after a few moments' hesitation, selected from the wardrobe a rough tweed suit with a tiling and lapels. Just as he was tying his tie, the little wireless which he had laid on the table at the beginning to record a message. He glanced at the clock. It was exactly three.

Quest's eyes shone for a moment with satisfaction. Then he sent his answering message, put on a coat and slouch hat, and left the house by the side entrance. In a few moments he was in Broadway, and a quarter of an hour later a taxicab deposited him at the entrance to professor's house. He walked swiftly up the drive and turned toward the garage, hoping every moment to find something of Lenora. The door of the place stood open. He entered and walked around. It was empty. There was no sign of either Craig or Lenora!

Quest recovered from his first disappointment, stole carefully into the place, made a minute examination of the place. Close to the corner from which Lenora had sent her wireless message to him, he stooped and picked up a handkerchief, which from the mark he recognized at once. A few feet away the gravel was disturbed though by the trampling of seven feet. He set his teeth.

"I've got to find that girl," he muttered. "Craig can go to h—!"

He turned away and approached the house. The front door stood open and he made his way at once to the library. The professor, who was sitting at his desk surrounded by a pile of books and papers, addressed him as he entered, without looking up.

"Where on earth have you been, Craig?" he inquired petulantly. "I have rung for you six times. Have I told you never to leave the place without orders?"

"It is not Craig," Quest replied quietly. "It is I, professor—Sanford Quest. The professor swung round in his chair and eyed his visitor in astonishment.

"Quest?" he exclaimed. "God bless my soul! Have they let you out already, then?"

"I came out," Quest replied gravely. "Sit tight, and listen to me for a moment, will you?"

"You came out?" the professor repeated, looking a little dazed. "You mean you escaped?"

Quest nodded.

"Perhaps I made a mistake," he admitted, "but here I am. Now listen, professor." And he told the story of the last few hours.

The professor's face was almost pitiful in its blank amazement. His mouth was wide open like a child's words seemed absolutely denied him. He rose to his feet, obvious a tremendous effort to adjust his ideas.

"Craig locked up in my garage," he murmured. "Craig guilty of the murders? Why, my dear Mr. Quest, a more harmless, a more inoffensive, peace-loving and devoted servant than dead easy. Then let me in the cell, take my clothes and leave me here." Quest followed the scheme in his mind quickly.

"It is all right," he decided, "but I am not at all sure that they can really hold me on the evidence they have got. If they can't, I shall be doing myself more harm than good in this way."

"It's no use unless you can get hold of Craig quickly," Laura said. "He is getting the scares, as it is."

"I'll do it," Quest decided. "Call the guard, Laura."

She obeyed. The man came good-naturedly toward them.

Quest looked at him steadfastly through the bars.

"I want you to come inside for a moment," Quest repeated softly. "Unlock the door, please, take the key off your bunch and come inside."

The man hesitated, but all the time his fingers were fumbling with the keys. Quest's lips continued to move. Laura opened the door and entered. A few minutes later Quest passed the key through the window to Laura, who was standing on guard.

Without a word, and with marvelous rapidity, the change was effected. Laura produced from her handbag a wig, which she pinned inside her hat and passed over to Quest. Then she flung herself on to the bed and drew the blanket up to her chin.

"How long will he stay like that?" she whispered, pointing to the warder, who was sitting on the floor with his arms folded and his eyes closed.

"Half an hour or so," Quest answered. "Don't bother about him. I shall drop the key back through the window."

Quest reached Georgia square at five minutes to three. A glance up and down assured him that the house was unwatched. He let himself in with his own key, threw Laura's clothes off, and, after a few moments' hesitation, selected from the ward-

John Craig never trod this earth!"

"Maybe," Quest replied, "but where is he?"

The professor could do nothing but look around him a little vaguely.

"I am going back," Quest announced. "My only chance is the wireless. If Lenora is alive or at liberty, she will communicate with me."

"May I come, too?" the professor asked timidly.

"Come by all means," Quest assented. "I will drive you down in your car, if you like."

The professor hurried away to get his coat and hat, and a few minutes later they started off. In Broadway they left the car at a garage and made their way up a back street which enabled them to enter the house at the side entrance. They passed upstairs into the sitting-room. Quest fetched the pocket wireless and laid it down on the table. The professor examined it with interest.

"You are marvelous, my friend," he declared. "With all these resources of science at your command it seems incredible that you should be in the position you are."

Quest nodded coolly.

"Just one moment, professor, while I send off a message," he said, opening the little instrument. "Where are you, Lenora?" he signaled. "Send me word and I will fetch you. I am in my own house for the present. Let me know that you are safe."

The professor leaned back, smoking one of Quest's excellent cigars. He was beginning to show signs of the liveliest interest.

"Quest," he said, "I wish I could induce you to dismiss this extraordinary supposition of yours concerning my servant Craig. The man has been with me for the best part of twenty years. He saved my life in South America; we have traveled in all parts of the world. He has proved himself to be exemplary, a faithful and devoted servant."

"Then perhaps you will tell me," Quest suggested, "where he is now, and why he has gone away? That does not look like complete innocence, does it?"

The professor sighed.

"I cannot stay here much longer, unless I mean to go back to the Tombs," Quest declared.

"Surely," the professor suggested, "your innocence will very soon be established?"

"There is one thing which will happen, without a doubt," Quest replied.

"My auto and the chauffeur will be discovered. I have insisted upon inquiries being sent out throughout the state of Connecticut. They tell me, too, that the police are hard on the scent of Red Gallagher and the other man. Unless they get wind of this and sell me purposely, their arrest will be the end of my troubles. To tell you the truth, professor," Quest concluded, "it is not of myself I am thinking at all just now. It is Lenora."

The professor nodded sympathetically.

"The young lady who shut Craig up in the garage, you mean? A plucky young woman she must be."

"She has a great many other good qualities besides courage," Quest declared. "Women have not counted for much with me, professor, up till now, any more than they have done, I should think, with you, but I tell you frankly, if anyone has hurt a hair of that girl's head I will have their lives, whatever the penalty may be! It is was still sitting. His usually good-humored face was a little clouded.

"Professor," he began— "What is the matter, Miles?"

A plain-clothes man from the street had come hurrying into the room.

"Say, Mr. French," he reported, "the fellows have got hold of a newswoman in the street who was coming along 'way round the back and saw two men enter this house by the side entrance, half an hour ago. One he described exactly as the professor here. The other, without a doubt, was Quest."

French turned swiftly toward the professor.

"You hear what this man says?" he exclaimed. Mr. Ashleigh, you're fooling me! You entered this house with Sanford Quest. You will have to tell us where he is hiding."

The professor knocked the ash from his cigar and replaced it in his mouth. His clasped hands rested in front of him. There was a twinkle of something like mirth in his eyes as he glanced up at the inspector.

"Mr. French," he said, "Mr. Sanford Quest is my friend. I am here in charge of his house. Believing as I do that his arrest was an egregious blunder, I shall say or do nothing likely to afford you any information."

French turned impatiently away. Suddenly a light broke in upon him; he rushed toward the door.

"That d—d Dutchie!" he exclaimed. The professor smiled benignly.

MISFIT MARRIAGES.

A Humorist's Flippant View of Matrimonial Alliances.

I would like to make a few useless remarks about married life. I not only would like to, but I am going to.

If you are a tall, sallow, nerveless, easy going man with a lilliputian income, enormous feet and hands and have an Adam's apple that looks like somebody trying to poke his fist through your neck you will marry a tiny black haired woman who has all seeing, lashless eyes, a mouth like a knife cut in a dish of cornstarch pudding and a love of jewelry and ancient black and tan dogs with rotten dispositions and hairpin legs. You may say you won't but you will.

If you are a red headed gentleman you will marry a beautiful girl. I don't know why this is, but you think over the red headed men you know and see if they haven't copped peaches.

If you are a little runt addicted to morning coats and gardenias, a large, vital, auburn haired lady will get you yet. She will want all there is in life. And don't sit down calmly after you're married, with a panetela in the corner of your mouth, and imagine you are that all.

The professor nodded again.

"A charming and well-bred young woman she is, ma," he admitted. "I fear that I should only be a bungler in your profession, Mr. Quest, but if there is anything I can do depend upon me. Personally, I am convinced that Craig will return to me with some plausible explanation as to what has happened."

Quest, for the third or fourth time moved cautiously toward the window. His expression suddenly changed. He glanced suddenly downward, frowned slightly.

"They're after me!" he exclaimed. "Sit still, professor."

He darted into his room and reappeared again almost immediately. The professor gave a gasp of astonishment at his altered appearance. His tweed suit seemed to have been turned inside out. There were no lapels now, and it was buttoned up to his neck. He wore a long white apron; a peaked cap and a chippiece of astonishing naturalness had transformed him into the semblance of a Dutch grocer's boy.

"I'm off, professor," Quest whispered. "You shall hear from me soon. I have not been here, remember!"

He ran lightly down the steps and into the kitchen, picked up a basket, filled it haphazard with vegetables and threw a cloth over the top. Then he made his way to the front door, peered out for a moment, swung through it on to the step, and, turning round, commenced to belabor it with his fist. Two plain-clothes men stood at the end of the street. A police automobile drew up outside the gate. Inspector French, attended by a policeman, stepped out. The former looked searchingly at Quest.

"Well, my boy, what are you doing here?" he asked.

"I cannot answer yet," Quest replied, in broken English. "Ten minutes already have I wasted. I have knocked at all the doors."

French smiled.

"You run along home," he said, "and tell your master that he had better leave off delivering goods here for the present."

Quest went off, grumbling. French opened the door with a master key and secured it carefully, leaving one of his men to guard it. He searched the rooms on the ground floor and finally ascended to Quest's study. The professor was still enjoying his cigar.

"Say, where's Quest?" the inspector asked promptly.

"Have you let him out already?" the professor replied, in a tone of mild surprise. "I thought he was in the Tombs prison."

The inspector pressed on without answering. Every room in the house

WOMEN RARELY STAMMER.

And This Is a Fact That Puzzles the Medical Experts.

Have you ever known a woman who stammered? It is very doubtful.

The fact that those afflicted with stammering are a hundred men to one woman is one of the most curious things in the science of pathology. Even the specialists in nervous troubles are utterly at a loss to account for this peculiarity. One eminent specialist says that in all his vast experience he has only known one woman to suffer from stammering. Stammering is a nervous affliction of the organs of speech, and the victim is usually a person of highly strung temperament. Where there is not any real reason for this trouble, the cause usually lies in the mind—that is, the stammerer stammers because he fears he will stammer.

Now, women are much more prone to nervous disorders, and this makes their immunity from the trouble all the more remarkable. For some mysterious reason their nervousness affects the organs of speech only in very rare cases. Stammering is said by some medical authorities not to be due at all to any defect in the organs of speech, but to come under the head of a bad functional disease.

Another peculiarity is that a person who may stammer badly in ordinary conversation can sing excellently and without hesitation. — London Answers.

OUR TINY KINGLETS.

Aristotle It Was Who Named the Golden Crowned Bird.

If pride could add anything to the stature of a bird the golden crowned kinglet should have grown an inch or so during the last 2,000 and odd years, but it is the same diminutive creature that it was in the days of ancient Greece. The kinglet, no bigger than your thumb, has the high honor of having been named by Aristotle, and the name has clung to it through the long centuries since Alexander's tutor studied nature.

The golden crowned kinglet and his congener, the ruby crowned kinglet, are the smallest American birds, barring only the members of the hummingbird tribe. Aristotle looked on the golden crowned kinglet and, taking out his writing material, set it down that he had that day seen a bird which was "hardly larger than a locust." The philosopher looked at the little circling crown of golden feathers which his newly found feathered friend wore and instantly he dubbed the bird "tyrannos."

In that age the word which Aristotle used had not taken on the "tyrannical" significance which afterward it held. It was significant only of kingship, and while royalty even then may have had much in common with tyranny the little bird escaped a stigma which no act of it then or since could have made deserved.

The golden crowned kinglet will never win fame as a songster, while his cousin, when its tininess is taken into consideration, is nothing short of a marvelous vocalist. The ruby crown's song is sweet, varied, continuous and of great carrying power. It is one of the marked songs of the woodland, and when one who has heard the song comes upon the singer the wonder grows that so small a body can contain such a store of music.

DOES SIR GEO. FOSTER NEED A CHAPERON?

Gossip is busy with the failure of Sir George Foster to attend the recruiting meeting at Napanee at which he was advertised to speak along with Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Theories differ as to what happened and why, but the fact remains that so far as Napanee is concerned Sir George was the light that failed.

The facts are substantially as follows: Sir Wilfrid and Sir George were both invited to speak at Napanee meeting and both accepted. Three days before the meeting there was a rumor afoot that Sir George did not intend going but it was put down as a rumor, simply that and nothing more. It was not like Sir George, a staunch imperialist, to have cold feet, when the empire was in danger, so it was considered as good as settled that he would be present at the Napanee meeting to stir the citizens with his bugle tones. Wherever Sir George has been asked to speak on this subject he has always been there with rings on his fingers, as it were, and bells on his toes. That is to say wherever he was featured as top-liner, and no other star of the first magnitude figured in the cast of characters.

On the morning of the meeting Sir Wilfrid was very ill. His trouble had reached an acute stage, and he was on the verge of a breakdown. But he had given his promise and had made up his mind to go and go he did, with what result everybody knows. He not only had to speak out his own time but he had to fill in Sir George's time, and the effort exhausted his last ounce of strength. The good people of Napanee did not give up hopes that Sir George would come and do his bit. They held the meeting for an hour for him. The visiting brass band played its full repertoire of patriotic tunes three times over but it did not seem to bring Sir George any nearer. The slide trombone did its best but Sir George did not respond to the call. Like the Lady of Shalott in her high tower they looked for the gallant knight ever and anon, but the gallant knight remained conspicuous by his absence. "He cometh not" they said presently, they were sure of it when they received a telegram from him dated Westmount stating that he had missed the train.

tawa. Within the last four years Sir George has tried every road out of Ottawa, tried some of them several times, and why should he go astray in a short journey to Napanee, he who has circumnavigated the earth in search of his soul's peace, baffles conjecture.

His friends admit that it is not like Sir George to lose his head on a little excursion like the one to Napanee. If you had asked them a month ago they would have said that Sir George could find his way round this little planet with his eyes shut. He not only knows the geography of the four quarters of the globe, but time tables and railway guides, which are a Chinese puzzle to most people, are to him as pellucid as his own literary style.

However, since this Napanee affair accused Sir George's friends are not so sure of him. It goes without saying that Sir George could not have been anxious to avoid appearing on the same platform with a political rival or that he feared comparison of speeches, or that he was unwilling to be a partner in patriotism, with Sir Wilfrid—Sir George is too mellow a philosopher to harbor jealousies like that—so Napanee must accept the story that he got balled up in his train connections. And indeed this is not unlikely, for Sir George has done most of his travelling abroad and is not as familiar with Ontario as he might be if he stayed at home more.

It has been suggested, however, that the next time Sir George is going to Napanee, Premier Borden should accompany him to the train and place him in charge of his conductor.

There were present at the meeting, representatives of the different societies throughout the county, interested in Red Cross work, and it was decided to purchase a motor ambulance to be called "The Lennox and Addington Ambulance." We hope that every place throughout the county, will do their share towards the purchase of the ambulance.

GREATEST ADVANCE THE BA

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The British and French armies have taken several large "muffles" out of the German lines between Verdun and the Belgia coast, capturing in the process trenches along a front of about 10 miles and just under twenty-five thousand prisoners, eight guns, and a number of machine guns.

At the same time British warship and French and Belgian batteries heavily bombarded the German positions on the coast between Zeebrugge and Nieuport.

The offensive, which resulted in the French and British victories, began Saturday morning. For several weeks there has been an almost incessant bombardment with big guns, which late last week increased intensity particularly in the sectors where the infantry attacks took place.

FRENCH GAIN MOST IMPORTANT

The French, who have the most important gain to their credit, made their chief onset against the German lines around Perthes, Beausejour and Supplies, in Champagne, where in December they made a considerable gain of ground. Saturday's attack however, backed by a tremendous artillery fire, gave them possession of more territory than they had retaken from the Germans since the latter dug themselves in after the battle of the Marne.

According to the French account the Germans were driven out of their trenches over a front of 15 miles varying in depth from two-thirds of a mile to two and a half miles. The French in this engagement captured 12,000 prisoners. Apparently the advantage is being pressed still further as the French communication make only the briefest mention of the operation.

GERMAN POSITIONS WEAKENED

The importance of this gain lies in the fact that every yard of ground taken in this region weakens the German position around Verdun, from which the Germans might be compelled to retire should the French succeed in making any further advance.

The French have also regained the cemetery of Souchez and trenches east of the "Labyrinth" in the Arras district, which was the scene of much heavy fighting earlier in the year. There the Germans had built what they considered almost impregnable fortifications.

This attack was made in co-operation with the British, who attacked on either side of La Bassée Canal. The attack to the south of the canal was, Field Marshall Sir John French reports, a complete success. Trenches five miles in width and about 400 of Napanee did not give up hopes that Sir George would come and do his bit. They held the meeting for an hour for him. The visiting brass band played its full repertoire of patriotic tunes three times over but it did not seem to bring Sir George any nearer. The slide trombone did its best but Sir George did not respond to the call. Like the Lady of Shalott in her high tower they looked for the gallant knight ever and anon, but the gallant knight remained conspicuous by his absence. "He cometh not" they said presently, they were sure of it when they received a telegram from him dated Westmount stating that he had missed the train.

Westmount was as near as Sir George got to Napanee that day; as near as he intended to get, some people say, but they speak without authority. Westmount is the fashionable section of Montreal, and Sir George has friends there, who, finding him lost in a great city, would doubtless give him shelter for the night.

For an experienced traveller like Sir George, he seems to have treated this Napanee trip in a casual, not to say careless way. The day before the meeting Sir George was in Ottawa. Being asked what train he was going on he replied that he had not looked up the train connection. When he was told there was a C.P.R. train going directly from Ottawa, the same train Sir Wilfrid was going on, he said he was not quite sure whether he would take that train or not. As a matter of fact he did not take that train. On the morning of the meeting he decided to take a train to Coteau Junction and catch the fast G.T.R. train there which would bring him into Napanee half an hour late. Although as Minister of Trade and Commerce Sir George understands that punctuality is the soul of business it apparently did not occur to him that half an hour is quite a spell to keep the British Empire waiting even for as great a man as himself. Some people might say that he was fighting shy and shirking his duty and trying to dodge going on the recruiting platform with Sir Wilfrid Laurier but a more reasonable supposition is that Sir George was holding back to make a dramatic entrance and overdid it. He held back so successfully that he didn't get there at all. Sir Wilfrid, who realized that time, tide, railway trains and the needs of the Empire wait for no man was there on the minute or a little sooner.

Sir George it seems started out from Ottawa for Coteau Junction but becoming confused, got off at St. Poly-carpe Junction and took a C.P.R. train back to Montreal, which was strange, as Alice in Wonderland would say, because Sir George was looking for a G.T.R. which would have G.T.R. painted on its sides, unless indeed, the Milita Department has given orders to have the letters painted out so as to avoid being shelled by the Germans. At all events Sir George found himself back in Montreal in such a state of mind that he did not know Windsor Street from next Friday.

This was the remarkable series of misadventures for seasoned globe-trotter like Sir George who in his capacity as Trade Wind is known all over the world for his unflinching eloquence and the regularity of his visits. Hitherto the Government has always trusted Sir George to find his way about anywhere. Just give him a suitcase and a toothbrush and Sir George would guarantee to go anywhere that tickets and an unlimited expense account would take him. No wild was too trackless for Sir George. He would venture wherever a Pullman car or a cabin-de-luxe would carry him. Travel has no terrors for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Up to the time of the Napanee meeting he had never missed a train connection in any part of the habitable universe. And let me tell you right here that almost any part of the habitable universe knows Sir George better and feels to him more like home than Ot-which the Germans might be compelled to retire should the French succeed in making any further advance. The French have also regained the cemetery of Souchez and trenches east of the "Labyrinth" in the Arras district, which was the scene of mu heavy fighting earlier in the year. There the Germans had built what they considered almost impregnable fortifications.

This attack was made in co-operation with the British, who attacked on either side of La Bassee Canal. The attack to the south of the canal was, Field Marshall Sir John French reports, a complete success. French five miles in width, and about 40 depth, were taken at this point.

MAY OUTFLANK THE ENEMY.

This push forward gives the British possession of the road from Lens to La Bassee, which was used by the Germans for moving troops and supplies north and south, and threatens to outflank the German troops who hold the Town of Lens.

Hill No. 70, one of the positions taken on the road, is less than a mile directly north of Lens, where Hulluch, which also fell into the hands of the British, is at the end of the road near La Bassee. It is only 12 miles from Hulluch to Lille, the capital of northern France.

POSITIONS WERE CONSOLIDATED.

North of the canal, the British, who they fought all day yesterday were unable to hold the ground gained, and had to fall back to the trenches which they had left in the morning. The attack, however, accomplished one purpose, as, according to Field Marshall French, German reserves were sent to check this movement, thus giving the British south of the canal an opportunity to consolidate their new positions unmolested.

A somewhat similar manoeuvre took place to the north and south of the Menin road, east of Ypres, and the results were the same. North of the road the British were unable to hold the ground taken, while to the south they gained about 600 yards of German trenches, and consolidated the ground won. So far as is reported, the British took 1700 prisoners with eight guns and several machine guns.

HOW LONDON HEARD THE NEWS.

London received the news of the successes of the allies on the western front early Sunday afternoon, and spread rapidly by means of extensions of the newspapers. In the hotels, clubs and churches great joy was shown. In many instances the churches turned their evening services into meetings of thanksgiving.

The morning newspapers to-day employ the biggest type they have used during the war in telling of the progress of the British and French troops. Editorially, they greet the news with enthusiasm, and express belief for the victories after months waiting. Some of the newspapers evince surprise in view of the fact that they deem the gains of the allies as offsets to the week-end casualty lists they published this morning giving the names of 103 officers and 3874 men, who have either been killed or wounded or are missing.

MEANS MORE HEAVY LOSSES.

The editorials announce the realization that the pushing forward of the British and French troops means further heavy losses, but all of the writers welcome the move as proving that the German front is not impregnable. The Times says it regrets that the series of operations of such importance should be so scantily recorded.

"Could the story of Saturday action have been told in some fuller and under due restrictions," says the Times, "it would have carried a message."

ALLIES WIN GREAT VICTORY

GREATEST ADVANCE SINCE THE BATTLE OF THE MARNE

LONDON, Sept. 26.—The British and French armies have taken several "military" out of the German lines between Verdun and the Belgian coast, capturing in the process trenches along a front of about 10 miles, and just under twenty-five thousand prisoners, eight guns, and a number of machine guns.

At the same time British warships and French and Belgian batteries avily bombarded the German positions on the coast between Zeebrugge and Nieuport.

The offensive, which resulted in the French and British victories, began yesterday morning. For several weeks there has been an almost incessant bombardment with big guns, which the last week increased intensity, particularly in the sectors where the enemy attacks took place.

FRENCH GAIN MOST IMPORTANT.

The French, who have the most important gain to their credit, made their chief onset against the German lines around Perthes, Beausejour and Eppeles, in Champagne, where in November they made a considerable advance in ground. Saturday's attack, however, backed by a tremendous artillery fire, gave them possession of territory more important than they had retaken from the Germans since the latter's retreat after the habit of the Marne.

According to the French account, the Germans were driven out of their trenches over a front of 15 miles, retiring in depth from two-thirds of the front to two and a half miles. The French in this engagement captured 20,000 prisoners. Apparently the advantage is being pressed still further, the French communication makes it the briefest mention of the operation.

GERMAN POSITIONS WEAKENED.

The importance of this gain lies in the fact that every yard of ground won in this region weakens the German position around Verdun, from which the Germans might be compelled to retire should the French succeed in making any further advance. The French have also regained the mastery of Souchez and trenches east of the "Labyrinth" in the Arras district, which was the scene of much heavy fighting earlier in the year. Here the Germans had built what was considered almost impregnable fortifications.

This attack was made in co-operation with the British, who attacked either side of La Bassée Canal. The attack to the south of the canal, Field Marshal Sir John French reports, a complete success. Trenches were won of joy, to countless British homes. The nation needs cheering, and the present occasion seems to have afforded a suitable opportunity. Presumably we shall learn the details in dribbles from Dutch or American sources, to which the press of this country is now compelled to turn for information, which is often of doubtful validity."

POPULAR WAR BOOKS

There is no time for reading history quite so appropriate as when it is being made. We are having illustrations of how treaties are abrogated, alliances formed and maps changed. History is being written in larger letters and more rapidly than ever since the first dawn of civilization. No one can afford in these strenuous times to miss any links in the chain of events. Able writers are collecting data, sorting it out and putting it in readable form and the presses of the publishers are issuing many excellent volumes dealing with every possible phase of the war. The Library board is sparing no expense in getting the latest and best books dealing with the war and other subjects closely related to it. The following fresh from the press have been placed upon the shelves this week:—

The War in Europe.
Prussianism and its destruction.
The Human Slaughter-house.
The German army from within.
Fighting in Flanders.
Belgium, Italy and Switzerland.
Russia and the Balkan States.
Austria-Hungary and Poland.
Germany.
Wars of the 19th century.
France.
The War and America.
What Germany wants.
How Belgium saved Europe.
Men around the Kaiser.
How Germany makes war.

It is to be hoped that the members of the library will show their appreciation of the determination of the board to keep abreast of the times. These books, as well as a number put in a few weeks ago, should be in great demand. No one interested in the great war can afford to be content with the daily bulletins. It is only by reading good books upon the war that the daily bulletins and press reports can have any real meaning. Other war books have been ordered and will in due course be mentioned in these columns. The boys have been remembered. "Between the lines in Belgium" written specially for the boys, may be read with interest by the older members. The same may be said of nine new volumes by Capt.

W.C.T.U. ITEMS.

Christian women! Do you know that women's suffrage is one of the planks of the W.C.T.U. policy and that we are therefore pledged to its support? If you believe that women can by their votes assist reforms, can you do less than do all you can, by prayer and consecrated effort to bring this about? In 1876 when Francis Willard was on her knees praying "Lord what will Thou have me do," the call came to speak and work for franchise. Though she regarded this as one of the bitterest trials of her life she was not disobedient to the heavenly vision. Next evening to a crowded house she told of her conviction that it was useless for women to attempt to get reforms without the ballot, and of her determination to spend her life working for that in connection with the temperance cause. After the meeting many dear friends turned their backs on her, and one especially dear, said, "you might have been a leader of the people, but you have deliberately chosen to be a Scout." Sisters are we willing to bear the scorn of those we love, that we may hasten the answer to our prayer "Thy Kingdom Come." We aim at a greater womanhood, a greater manhood and a greater race.

DENBIGH.

Miss Flora Fritsch has been engaged to teach school in school section No. six (Slate Falls) and Miss Mary Dool in school section No. eight, (Glenfield) in this municipality.

The municipal council met at the Denbigh House last Saturday. Albert Lockwood was appointed collector of taxes for this year. There were three more applications for that office.

Dr. R. E. Sparks, dentist of Kingston made one of his professional visits through this vicinity and was kept professionally busy yesterday at the Denbigh House from morning until night.

Harvest Thanksgiving services will be held at the Lutheran church on Sunday, October 10th. The local minister will be assisted by Rev. R. Kasdorf of Annapolis, and perhaps also by Rev. E. Gowan, of Petawawa.

BLUNDERS IN BATTLE.

Cases Where Troops Have Fired Upon Their Own People.

It was at Beacon hill during the Boer war that there happened one of the saddest incidents in the history of the British army. The East Surrey were in a hollow between two hills creeping up the valley. The West Surrey regiment, half a mile away, caught sight of the crouching figures and took them for Boers.

In a moment a heavy volley rang out, and it was not until an officer, realizing the mistake, rushed out in front of the West Surreys that the firing ceased.

A nurse, writing afterward from the Eastcott hospital, said it was pitiful to see the West Surreys coming in one after another, bringing cigarettes, dainties, any present they could find, for the wounded men, then, bearing their groans, turn away, saying: "God forgive us! This is our work!"

One of the strangest cases of troops firing upon their own people occurred in Roumania in the year 1885. At that time Roumania was in a very disturbed condition, and bands of robbers—regular banditti—prowled over the country, raiding the villages and farms. The largest of these bands made its headquarters in the forest of Rhodope and gradually increased until

DEFIED THE AUDIENCE.

Then the Audience Forced Adelaide Neilson to Surrender.

In "Forty Years On the Stage" the author, John H. Barnes, an old time actor, has this to say of Adelaide Neilson, the once famous star:

"One quite extraordinary gift she had—namely, that of tears. At any given moment or cue she could make the tears mount to her eyes and even run down her cheeks irrespective of anything she was feeling at the time. It almost resembled the turning on of a tap. Undoubtedly she had great beauty—wonderful eyes and an expressive mouth, fine coloring of complexion and hair and a rather spare figure.

"Her appearance suggested a woman of Spanish or Italian type. As a matter of fact she was born of humble parents in a village in Yorkshire in 1848, and her real name was Elizabeth Ann Brown. In her youth she was by turns a mill hand at Gulseley (Yorks), a nursemaid and a barmaid, so the strenuous life she must have led to raise herself to the position she eventually attained may be imagined."

An example of the temper that sometimes flared from behind the Neilson beauty is included in this passage:

"A curious incident occurred in Baltimore. The play was 'As You Like It.' Milnes Levick played Jacques and had spoken the 'Seven Ages' speech very finely, gaining tremendous applause at the end. Miss Neilson (as far as I know without intent) said, 'Go on, go on,' and the scene was taken up before the applause died down.

"The audience got annoyed and seemed to feel that it was being treated scurvily and kept up the applause in a manner which stopped the play. Miss Neilson ordered the curtain to be rung down, and then the storm burst out. It became a battle royal between her and the audience, who simply declined to listen to a word until Mr. Levick had repeated the speech. A silly scene, which might have been avoided, but became an absolute deadlock, out of which there was only one way. The audience was master of the situation."

Rules of the Game.

Industrial success is personal, not social. Society is not holding a man down; the existing social system is not keeping men at the bottom; it is their own personal deficiencies that keep them there. Industrial success can be won at a price, and the price is observance of the inevitable rules of the game—namely, sobriety, industry, saving, avoidance of speculation, knowledge of human nature, good judgment, common sense, persistence, intelligence and integrity. No social system ever keeps a man down who has these qualities. Is it not the best thing for the world to find out that industrial success can be won only by the display of these qualities?—J. Laurence Laughlin in Atlantic Monthly.

Channel Island Currencies.

The currency system of the channel islands is complex. Both Jersey and Guernsey have a coinage of their own and in addition permit the free circulation of the coins of England and France. Guernsey's coins of copper, which include a half farthing, do not go higher in value than a penny, but pound notes are also issued. And if you take in Guernsey on the way back from a holiday in France you can have

DESERONTO ROAD.

Quite a hurricane of wind and rain swept this locality early Sunday morning and continued during the day, doing much damage to the apple crop, which was mostly blown off.

Mr. McFarland was again on this street last week with his threshing outfit, but at present is west of Deseronto, and expects to return this week as many farmers are waiting to thresh.

Mr. H. C. File with his corn binder, has been cutting corn for his neighbors during the past three weeks.

Mr. Kirkpatrick, of the Palace Road has become a resident of this road, having moved in half of Mrs. McCaul's house, and intends working her farm on shares.

Mr. Robert Bowen may well be called the Tomato King, having already placed several hundred bushels with the E. Metcalf Canning Co.

Mr. Chas. Thompson has erected a fine new implement house just east of his barn. Mr. Markle of Deseronto was the carpenter.

Mr. Thomas Hultz, who has made his home with William Hudson for the past few years has joined the soldiers and left for training a few days ago.

Mr. Mendle Kimmerly left one day last week for his fishing camp where he expects to spend the greater part of his time this fall.

Mr. Arthur Rendell of Deseronto, has been along here buying wheat for a Kingston Syndicate.

Mrs. Herb File is away for a few weeks visiting friends in Toronto.

THE LIQUOR QUESTION.

What is the significance of the attitude of the government towards the deputation from the Dominion Alliance which recently appeared before them asking for the prohibition of the retail sale of liquor during the war? Some people seem to think the reply of the government was satisfactory. The Premier said that the question of the liquor traffic had been a matter of absorbing attention to him and his government for the last six months. We will earnestly strive," said the Premier, "to reach the wisest and best conclusion." The License Commission, in addition to the exercise of its executive function, is now enquiring into the whole question and will, no doubt, make suggestions to the government and act in an advisory capacity.

Those who are not satisfied with this statement say that not only is it very indefinite, whereas the deputation asked for a specific object; but the effect of the government's reply may be in the nature of a sedative to allow the government still further delay in the matter and which will help to keep the people contented in the meantime even without action.

The view which seems to be most reasonable for temperance people is that while they are pleased that the government's reply is favorable as far as it goes, in that it affirms their concern for the question, the real lesson from the incident is that now is the time for public opinion against the liquor traffic to be alert, to organize itself and to present its claims strongly to the government while they are in a mood perhaps to listen to it.

At that time Roumania was in a very disturbed condition, and bands of robbers—regular banditti—prowled over the country, raiding the villages and farms. The largest of these bands made its headquarters in the forest of Rhodope and gradually increased until it became 300 strong. It spread terror through the whole countryside, and at last the government sent a body of troops to hunt it down.

The robber band was located on top of a mountain, and the colonel in command of the troops split his forces and sent half up each side so as to attack from two points simultaneously.

A thick fog fell, and the robbers took advantage of it to sneak away quietly by a path known only to themselves. The troops, unaware of this maneuver, continued their ascent, and the two bodies, each crawling along under cover of rocks and brushwood, met at the top. They at once opened fire and fought desperately for a whole hour before the mistake was discovered. Eighty were killed and 300 wounded.—Philadelphia Ledger.

On the Sea.

From all antiquity and in all ages men have gone down to the sea in ships and plowed the main. There is a fascination about the ocean that never grows old, and the terrors that encompass the waste of waters seem but to add to its attractions. Perhaps this arises from the fact that the ocean covers the only free land on the globe. The sailor on his humble bark has an equal right of way with the mighty steamship; he pays no rent and calls no man master. Once he touches land he must bow to the law of King This or Queen That, but on the high seas he can roam without let or hindrance and owes allegiance to no ruler but nature. The sailor leads a hard and perilous life and has the single boon of freedom to compensate for risk and privation.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Tripoli's Scottish Admiral.

Tripoli has long had a bad reputation, but reached the zenith of offensiveness a century ago, when its private fleet was organized by a renegade Scotchman, Peter Lyste. Deserting the English ship on which he was mate, Lyste turned Moslem, married a near relation to the reigning pasha and soon rose to the position of lord high admiral of the fleet. He did a deal of mischief, but came to a bad end.—London Standard.

A Turkish Custom.

Upon the graves of the dead in the Turkish cemeteries little vessels of water are placed for the benefit of the birds, and some of the marble tombs have basins chiseled out for the same purpose, the superstition being that birds carry messages about the living to the dead and, like everything else in Turkey, are suspected of being spiteful unless something is done to curry their favor.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER AND SIR GEO FOSTER

Citizens of Lennox and Addington, irrespective of their political affiliations, will be glad to know that Sir Wilfrid Laurier has now completely recovered from the serious illness which has kept him in the hospital at Ottawa, and under the doctor's care ever since his visit to Napanee four weeks ago. The veteran Liberal leader, though suffering acutely, for some days prior to the recruiting meeting, from an abscess on the jaw, due to a molar and bone infection, and with his whole physical system weakened from the constant nerve-racking tension, heroically kept his engagement with the people of this county.

The strain of speaking under the disadvantageous conditions of the armchairs with hot and humid weather and bad acoustics, undoubtedly aggravated his illness. On returning to Ottawa he was sent by his physician almost immediately to the hospital where an operation was performed on the diseased bone. Sir Wilfrid was on the operating table for nearly an hour, under the influence of anaesthetics. The added strain and consequent weakness from the Napanee meeting made his recovery from the operation slower than it would otherwise have been and for a fortnight he was not allowed to receive visitors at the hospital. His recovery during the past two weeks, however, has been rapid and with the old trouble eradicated by the operation, Sir Wilfrid is now in even better health and spirits than before his illness.

Sir Wilfrid showed his "gameness" and his patriotism by refusing to let considerations of personal discomfort or health interfere with his engagement to attend the recruiting meeting here, even though against doctor's orders and practically at the risk of his life. He showed, too, his thoughtfulness and courtesy by making the last act of his Napanee visit a call at the residence of Mr. Uriah Wilson, ex-M.P., to shake hands again with a former associate and opponent for many years in Parliament.

As another aftermath of the Napanee recruiting meeting it may be noted that Sir George Foster's failure to appear has never been officially explained to the committee in charge of the meeting. It is understood, however, that Sir George, instead of coming with Sir Wilfrid, decided to take a more round about way via Coteau Junction. It is explained that he got off the train at Polycarpe Junction, instead of at Coteau Junction where he could have made the connection with the Grand Trunk to Napanee as the train was on time. When the train pulled out of Polycarpe Junction, Sir George found that the only place he could get to from there was Montreal. On arrival at Montreal he sent his telegram to Mayor Gibbard announcing that he had missed the train connection at Coteau Junction.

A GLIMPSE OF NEW YORK.

The Metropolis as it Appeared to a Kansas City Woman.

It takes all kinds of impressions to make up travelogues. This is what a Kansas City woman, visiting New York, wrote home:

Take away Broadway and Fifth avenue and what have you left? Nothing but Wall street, the sky line and the Woolworth building.

The other day I met a once western woman who has been here five years. She fell on my neck and wept and invited me to go shopping with her. I detest shopping and was on the verge of refusal when she cinched it. She said:

"We'll go shopping and tell each other how much nicer the west is." Believe me, I went.

My chiefest joy and recreation is getting lost in the subway. When I am not wandering about in the interior of the earth and wondering what it seems like to smother, I am shooting about on the elevated measuring the distance to the ground and figuring on how much there will be left to scoop up.

I have seen all the matinee idols, and I think Grant's tomb is a mighty roomy concern for just one family. The one thing that interests me is the Eden Musee. I gaze at the waxworks for hours and wish I was one of 'em.

Last night on the elevated I heard a young man ardently proposing to a young woman who swung beside him, holding on to the same strap. I stood right next to them. I was afraid they would leave the car before she took him, but I was satisfied from the soulful expression with which she gazed at him that she was going to take him all right. And, after all, my station was called before he finished telling her about how he hated to ask her to share his poverty, but that he loved her so deeply and truly that he felt life was dark and drear without her. I never did have a chance to overhear a proposal before, and I was so mad when my station was called that I felt like hunching her and saying: "Go ahead; tell him you'll have him—quick! I get out here!"—New York Tribune.

INVESTING IN STOCKS.

Best Wall Street Tip to Those Anxious to Buy Securities.

I have noticed during a quarter of a century's observations that when all the financial writers are proclaiming the merits of a particular stock and, at the same time, insiders, who are supposed to know all about it, are pointing out its good points, increasing earnings, etc., somebody stands waiting to sell. I have also noticed that when a stock advances day by day or week by week without anything being said in explanation or without any effort being made to attract attention to it there must be something "worth while" going on, especially if transactions in that stock be large. Perhaps some of my observant readers have noticed the same peculiarities of the stock market.

It is perfectly natural that when one wants to sell his goods he should extol their merits and that if he wants to buy a property he should go about it quietly and if he has knowledge of its merits should say as little as possible about them until he has completed the purchase. The same motives and principles that move men to buy and sell commodities of any kind inspire men

On arrival at Montreal he sent his telegram to Mayor Gibbard announcing that he had missed the train connection at Coteau Junction. This explanation is the answer given to those who have been unkind enough to hint that the acting Premier had been advised by some of his colleagues to side-step the Napanee meeting altogether and that he never intended to reach here at all, and publicly unite with the Liberal leader on the war issue.

BATTLE SCARRED JUNE.

Summer's First Month Notable For Many Historic Conflicts.

The battle of Bunker Hill was fought on June 17, 1775, one of many memorable battles fought in the month of June.

Waterloo, the declaration of war between Great Britain and the United States in 1812, the Shannou-Chesapeake fight in that war, the battle of Naseby, the storming of the Mamelon redoubts by the French in the Crimean struggle, Marengo, Friedland, Raab, Kolin, Plassey, the battle of Monmouth and the fight at Fort Moultrie all were in June.

Many of the most famous struggles of the war between the states took place in June. The Kearsarge sank the Alabama on June 19, 1864; Memphis fell on June 6, 1862; the seven days before Richmond began on June 26, 1862; the battle of Cold Harbor was fought from June 1 to 3, 1862; Winchester was fought on June 13-15, 1862; Lynchburg on June 17-18, 1862; Mechanicsville on June 26, 1862; Gaines' Mill on the following day, and the siege of Petersburg lasted from June 15 to 30.

The massacre of Custer and his men by the Indians on the Little Big Horn, the greatest disaster that has befallen United States cavalry in decades, also took place in June—June 25, 1876, a date that always will be kept as a day of mourning by the Seventh cavalry.

The same motives and principles that move men to buy and sell commodities of any kind inspire men and movements in Wall street.

For this reason I have advised my readers who wish to be successful in speculating not to take tips so freely given by those who have their own purposes to serve, but to note with care the operations of the market and news that has bearing on the values of securities. I do not mean by this the rumors that financial writers and tipsters give out, but the real news found in official reports of declining or increasing earnings and the statements required by law to be made and sworn to.—Jasper in Leslie's Weekly.

True Actors.

In an interview F. R. Benson, the English actor-manager, once said: "I draw my recruits from every phase of society. The best have often come from the gutter. They know life. The two greatest geniuses I have ever had in my company, actors that I would place beside Jefferson, Booth, Got or Rachel, couldn't have told you six lines on the subject of art, but they could make people laugh and cry."

It's No Use.

"There's no use in talking," began Mrs. Nagg.

"I know it," interrupted Mr. Nagg, "and the fact that you persist in talking after making that declaration simply proves what I have often asserted, regarding the lack of logic exhibited by some women. Now proceed with your lecture."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Business Woman.

He—When are you going to stop all this foolishness and make up your mind to marry me? She—I haven't decided yet. Dad says it is good policy when it costs you nothing to keep open just as many options as possible.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

War.

Admiral Decatur once said in behalf of war that it "shortens life, but also broadens it." Most people, however, would rather have a narrow long life than a broad short one.—Kansas City Journal.

Rent.

The term "rent" was adopted, no doubt, because of the ragged hole made in the tenant's income when the collector finishes with him.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Sun in Alaska.

Noon on Dec. 21 at Fairbanks, Alaska, is identical with midnight, June 21, at the same place except that it is usually 130 degrees colder and there is snow on the ground. In winter the sun in interior Alaska rises about 10 o'clock and sinks out of sight again about 2 in the afternoon.

The temperature in the latter part of December usually is 40 degrees below zero. Sometimes it goes down to 60 below. In summer the thermometer on June 21 will often show 90 degrees in the shade, thus giving a range of 150 degrees.—Popular Mechanics.

Reaching the People

A prominent real estate dealer in Toronto says that he gets better and quicker results from the Classified Want Ads. than from any other kind of publicity. He states that the results are out of proportion to the small expense involved.

There is a moral in that for you if you want to reach the people.

A FOOL AND HIS MONEY

By

No sooner was this reassuring news received than Mrs. Titus complacently set about having her trunks packed. The entire household was in a stew of activity, for she had suddenly decided to catch the 8 o'clock train for Paris. I telephoned to reserve accommodation on the Orient express from Vienna and also to have it stopped at the town across the river, a concession secured at a no inconsiderable cost.

She was to travel once more as my mother.

"You will not fail to look us up when you come to New York, will you, Mr. Smart? Mr. Titus will not be happy until he has expressed to you in person his endless gratitude. You have been splendid. We shall never forget your kindness, your thoughtfulness, your—your forbearance. I—I—"

Upon my word, there were real tears in the dear lady's eyes! I forgot and forgave much in recognition of this instant of genuine feeling on her part. It was not necessary for her to complete the sentence so humbly begun.

Their departure was made with some degree of caution, Mrs. Titus rather considerably reminding herself that my interests were at stake. I saw them aboard the train. She played her part admirably—I will say that for her. She lifted her veil so that I could bestow a farewell filial kiss upon her cheek. Jasper junior's eyes popped very wide open at this, and as he shook my hand warmly at parting he said:

"You are a wonder, John—a sure enough wonder. Why, hang it all, she doesn't even let dad do that!"

But Jasper junior was very young, and he couldn't understand.

At last we were to ourselves, my extensive household and I. Late that night I sat in my study considering the best means of reducing my staff of servants and in computing, with dismay, the cost of being a princely host to people who had not the least notion what it meant to do sums in economic subtraction. It was soon apparent to me that retrenchment, stern and relentless, would have to follow upon my wild though brief season of prodigality. I decided to dismiss the scullery maid.

I was indescribably lonely. Poopendyke was worried about my pallor, my lassitude. At the end of a week he took it upon himself to drop a line to the Hazzards, urging them to run out for a visit in the hope that company might take me out of myself. All attempts to renew my work on the ill fated novel met with utter failure. The power of mental concentration was gone. I spent most of my time in the garden.

"She may have been regenerated," he said obligingly. "You know her better than I do, old chap. What say?"

"I didn't say anything," I muttered. "I thought you did."

I hesitated a moment and then purged myself of the truth. "As a matter of fact, I have reason to believe she's in love with Amberdale and has been for a long time. I'm not saying it in disparagement, believe me. God knows she's entitled to something decent and fine in the shape of love. I hope he's good enough for her."

They looked at me with interest, and Smith broke the momentary silence.

"Oh, he's good enough for her," he said, with a queer smile.

"I'm glad of that," I said gruffly.

"The old la—I mean Mrs. Titus—will be tickled to death if the match is pulled off," said Hazzard.

"She was tickled the first time," said I sententiously, and changed the subject. There was no sense in prolonging the agony.

Toward the close of their visit a message arrived from the countess herself, signed with the fictitious name we had agreed upon. The news she gave caused us to celebrate that night. We had a bonfire in the courtyard and drank to the god of good luck.

Cargo safely landed in New York and forwarded to the Adirondacks for storage and to await the appearance of a claimant. Former owner has agreed to accept $1,500,000 and release all claims. When are you coming over? ALROSE.

By the most extraordinary coincidence a curt, businesslike letter arrived in the evening post from Maris Tarnowsky postmarked Paris. Its contents staggered me.

John Bellamy Smart, Esq.:

Dear Mr. Smart—Will you put a price on Schloss Rothhoefen? I am desirous of purchasing the castle if you care to sell and we can agree upon a fair price for the property. Sentiment moves me in this matter, and I earnestly hope that you may be induced to part with your white elephant. If you will be so kind as to wire your decision, you will find me deeply grateful and at the Ritz for the ensuing fortnight. Faithfully yours, MARIS TARNOWSKY.

My "white elephant!" I was so eager to get rid of it that I would have wired at once, naming a figure proportionately low had it not been for the united protests of my four friends and the canny advice of Mr. Poopendyke.

"Soak him!" said he, and I arose to the occasion.

I waited for three days and then telegraphed him that I would not take a better less than $250,000, more than doubling the price I had paid for the property. I was prepared, however, to come down a paltry hundred thousand or so if he revealed signs of reluctance.

We built another bonfire that night and danced around it like so many savages.

Terms acceptable. Will come to Schloss Rothhoefen at once to complete the transfer. TARNOWSKY.

Accompanied by Hazzard and Smith, I went over the castle from top to bottom in quest of the reason for Tarnowsky's prompt acceptance of my demand. We had no doubt that he had a good and sufficient reason for wanting the place, and but one thing suggested itself to our imagination; his absolute certainty that treasure was hidden somewhere about the venerable pile, treasure of considerable magnitude, you may be sure, or he would not have revealed such alacrity in accepting my terms. Sentiment had nothing to do with this surprising move on his part. That was all bosh. He had an ulterior motive, and it was for me to get the better of him at his cause he was a brave man I have no feeling of regret over the outcome of our—meeting. It is no honor to kill a coward, Mr. Smart."

He introduced his three companions. I was surprised to see that the lawyer was not the fawning Schymansky and later on inquired for him. Tarnowsky laughed. "Poor old Schymansky! He is in prison."

"Aha! I am not surprised," said I.

"He was my second, poor chap. It did not occur to him to run away after the—er—duel. They had to make an example of some one. His trial comes up next week. I am afraid he may be dealt with rather harshly. I miss him dreadfully. But let us come to the matter in hand, Mr. Smart. I dare say your time is valuable. You have no objection to my going over the place with Mr. Saks, I am sure. He is the architect who is to rebuild the castle for me. My attorney and Mr. Pooley, the notary, will, with your assistance, draw up the proper contracts preliminary to the formal transfer, and I will sign them with you upon my return."

"Would it not be better to discuss the question of payments before we go any further, Count Tarnowsky?"

"You will be paid in cash, Mr. Smart, the instant the deed is transferred," he said coldly.

I followed him to the top of the blankly. "You see, if any one should know, I am that one. He has not approached me, of that you may be sure. He did not appear to be interested."

"My information is not authoritative," Mr. Smart, said he. "It came to me through my representatives who conferred with his lawyers a fortnight in regard to certain difficulties that had existed between us. From what they were able to gather, the idea taken root in the old man's head. Now I want to buy this place for no other reason than to tell him that he has enough money in his possession to chase it from me. Do you see? Very you may call it, as I do, but it pleases me to coddle it."

Very thoughtfully I strode along beside him. Would I be serving countess ill or well by selling the place to Tarnowsky? It was her whim, course, and it was a foolish one.

"Suppose that he offered you what you are to pay me for the place," said I, struck by a sudden thought.

He laughed easily. "You will not seem, acquit me of cupidity, Smart. I should not sell to him on any consideration. That is final. Take it or leave it."

By this time we were in the room once occupied by the countess. I glanced about the apartment carelessly.

"Deserted, I observe," he remarked with a queer smile.

My heart almost stood still. "What do you mean?"

"If I am not mistaken, these are rooms once occupied by your valiant wife. Am I right?"

I steeled myself. "She has gone away," I said. "Couldn't stand climate."

"I see," said he, but he was smiling. "How does your valet stand it?"

"Nicely," said I, with a conscious blush.

"I mean the separation, of course. Certainly! He is used to it."

"Isn't it rather odd that he should still think she is here in the castle?"

"Does he?" I murmured.

"I inquired for her when I entered him downstairs. He said lessness, would have to follow upon my wild though brief season of prodigality. I decided to dismiss the scullery maid. I was indescribably lonely. Poopendyke was worried about my pallor, my lassitude. At the end of a week he took it upon himself to drop a line to the Hazzards, urging them to run out for a visit in the hope that company might take me out of myself. All attempts to renew my work on the ill-fated novel met with utter failure. The power of mental concentration was gone. I spent most of my time in the garden.

The Hazzards came and with them the joyously beautiful Betty Billy. Poopendyke must have prepared them for the task in hand, for they proceeded at once to transform the bleak, dreary old castle into a sort of hilarious merry-go-round, with me in the very vortex of it all. They succeeded in taking me "out of myself." I will say that for them. My spirits took an upward bound and, wonderful to relate, retained their altitude in spite of all I could do to lower them. I did not want to be happy. I figured that I owed it to my recently aroused temperament to be permanently unhappy. But the wind blew another way, and I drifted amiably with it, as a derelict drifts with the currents of the ocean, but preferably with the warm gulf stream.

We had word from Mrs. Titus in London that negotiations had been reopened with the count and that a compromise might be expected. The obstinate nobleman had agreed, it seemed, to meet Jasper Titus' lawyers in Paris at no distant date. My chief concern, however, was for the countess herself. That she had successfully reached the high seas was apparent; if not, the newspapers, which I read with eagerness, would have been filled with accounts of her seizure. We eagerly awaited the promised cablegram from New York announcing her safe arrival there.

Smith joined us at the end of the week. I nerved myself to question him about the Englishman.

"Splendid fellow," said he, with discouraging fervor; "one of the finest chaps I know, eh, George?"

"For an Englishman," admitted Hazzard.

"He's a gentleman, and that's more than you can say for the taggart nobility that paid court to Aline Tarnowsky. He was in love with her, but he was a gentleman about it. A thoroughbred, I say."

"Good looking?" I inquired.

"Well, rather—the sort of chap women rave about. Ask Betty. She was mad about him, but he couldn't see anything in her. I think she hates him now. He had eyes for no one but the fair countess. An awful grind on Betty. She's used to something different."

Hazzard studied the clouds that drifted over our heads. "I wonder if Aline cared anything for him."

"I've always believed that she liked him better than she cared to admit even to herself."

"I fancy he'll not let any grass grow under his feet now that she's free," said Dr. Hazzard.

"Think she'll have him?"

"Why not? He has a much better position in England than Tarnowsky has here, and he's not after her money. I hate to say it, but Aline is a seeker after titles. She wouldn't be averse to adding 'your ladyship' to her collection."

"Oh, come!" I protested. "That is a nasty thing to say, George."

bottom in quest of the reason for Tarnowsky's prompt acceptance of my demand. We had no doubt that he had a good and sufficient reason for wanting the place, and but one thing suggested itself to our imagination; his absolute certainty that treasure was hidden somewhere about the venerable pile, treasure of considerable magnitude, you may be sure, or he would not have revealed such alacrity in accepting my terms. Sentiment had nothing to do with this surprising move on his part. That was all bosh. He had an ulterior motive, and it was for me to get the better of him at his own game if I could. While I was eager to get rid of the castle at any price, I did not relish the thought of being laughed at for a fool by Maris Tarnowsky after he had laid his greedy hands upon treasure that had been mine without my knowledge.

We spent two unprofitable days in going over the place, and in the end sank down tired, defeated and without the slightest evidence in our possession that so much as a half crown lay hidden there as treasure trove. I gave in and announced that if Tarnowsky could find anything worth having he was entitled to it so far as I was concerned, and I wouldn't begrudge him a farthing's worth.

He telegraphed that he would arrive on the morning of the third day, accompanied by his lawyer, a notary and an architect. My four guests departed in haste by the late night train after extracting a promise from me to join them in Vienna when I was no longer the master of Schloss Rothhoefen. I rather relished the thought of a brief vacation.

Then, like the spider, I crept back into my web and waited for the foolish fly, knowing all the time that he would have the better of me in the long run.

I confess to a feeling of sadness in parting with the place, after all, elephantine though it was in every sense of the word. Within its gray and ancient walls that beautiful thing called love had come to me to live with me forever. It had come unbidden, against my will, against my better judgment and in spite of my prejudices, but still it was a thing to cherish and to hold in its virgin youth all through the long years to come. It would always be young and sweet and rose colored, this unrequited love of mine. Walking through the empty, dismantled rooms that had once been hers, I grew sick with longing and in something like fear fled downward, absurd tears blinding my eyes. Verily, I was a fool—a monstrous, silly fool!

Tarnowsky was as bland and smiling as a May morning as he came jauntily down the great hall to where I awaited him.

"I am here incognito, my dear Smart," he said, extending his gloved hand, which I took perforce. "Sub rosa, you might say," he went on, with a wry smile. "A stupid, unchivalric empire has designs upon me, perfunctorily perhaps, but it's just as well not to stir up the monkeys, as you Americans would put it."

"Our late friend, the baron, was not totally without friends, I take it," said I dryly.

He made a grimace. "Nor enemies," he declared. "Brave men usually have more enemies than friends, and he was a brave man, a truly brave man. Be-say you mean to be making me have no objection to my going over the place with Mr. Saks, I am sure. He is the architect who is to rebuild the castle for me. My attorney and Mr. Pooley, the notary, will, with your assistance, draw up the proper contracts preliminary to the formal transfer, and I will sign them with you upon my return."

"Would it not be better to discuss the question of payments before we go any further, Count Tarnowsky?"

"You will be paid in cash, Mr. Smart, the instant the deed is transferred," he said coldly.

I followed him to the top of the stairs which descended to the basement of the castle. It was rather significant that he elected to explore the lower regions first of all.

"I shall accompany you," said I deliberately.

A faint scowl came into his face. He eyed me fixedly for a moment, then shrugged his shoulders and said that his only desire was to avoid putting me to any unnecessary trouble. If I cared to come he would be more than grateful.

"It isn't necessary to visit the cellars, Saks," he said to the architect. "Ample time for that sort of rummaging. I particularly want your opinion on the condition of the intersecting walls on this floor and above. My scheme of improvement, Mr. Smart, contemplates the enlargement of these halls by throwing them into one."

"A very simple process," said I, "if the whole structure doesn't topple down upon your heads while you're about it."

"I shall contrive to save my scalp, Mr. Smart, no matter what happens. It is very precious to me."

CHAPTER XXV.

I Burn A Few Bridges.

WENT over the castle rather hurriedly, I thought, but he explained that Saks merely wanted a general idea of the structure; he would return another day to make a careful inspection.

"I dare say you are surprised that I should be willing to pay double your original price for Schloss Rothhoefen," he ventured, pausing in the corridor to light a cigarette. We were on our way to the top of the east wing.

"Oh, no," I said calmly. "I am aware that treasure is buried here. As a matter of fact, I've tried to unearth it myself, but without success. I wish you better luck."

"Thanks," said he laconically, after the first swift glance of inquiry. "It is doubtless a fairy tale, banded down by tradition. I take no stock in it. My principal object in acquiring Rothhoefen is to satisfy a certain vanity which besets me. I have it on excellent authority that my ex-father-in-law—the man Titus, you know—talks of buying the property and performing the stupendous, characteristic American feat of removing it, stone and timber, just as it is, to his estate north of New York city. No one but a vulgar, purse-proud American would think of doing such a thing."

The news staggered me. Could there be anything in what he said? If it was true that Jasper Titus contemplated such a quixotic move there could be but one compelling force behind the whim—sentiment. But not sentiment on the part of Jasper Titus.

"I cannot believe that he considers doing such a thing," I said, rather was quite well this morning, except for a headache."

"She is subject to headaches, I believe," said I, with the utmost nonchalance. He lifted his right eyebrow slightly, but said no more on the subject.

A pile of rubbish lay heaped in a corner of the room, swept up and there by the big Schmecks to await a spring housecleaning season, I presume. Tarnowsky at first eyed the heap curiously, then rather intently. Suddenly he strode across the room, gingerly rooted among the odds and ends with the toe of his highly polished boot.

To my horror a dilapidated doll detached itself and rolled out upon the floor, a well remembered treasure. Rosemary's and so unique in appearance that I doubt if there was another in the world like it. Indeed, I have distinct recollection of being told that the child's father had painted in extraordinary features and had himself decorated the original flaxen lock with singular stripes of red and white and blue, a sardonic tribute to the home land of her mother.

I turned away as he stooped and picked up the soiled, discarded effigy. When next I looked at him out of the corner of my eye he was holding the doll at arm's length and staring at it with a fixed gaze. I knew that he recognized it. There could be no doubt in his mind as to the identity of the telltale object. My heart was thumping fiercely.

An instant later he rejoined me, but not a word did he utter concerning the strange discovery he had made. His face was set and pallid, and his eyes were misty. Involuntarily I looked to see if he had the doll in his hand and in that glance observed the bulge of surface of his coat pocket.

In silence we stood there awaiting the reappearance of Saks, who had gone into one of the adjoining rooms. I confess that my hand trembled as I lighted a fresh cigarette. He was standing moodily at the floor, his hands clasped behind his back. Something smacking of real intelligence ordered me to hold my tongue. I smoked placidly, yet waited for the outburst, did not come. It never came. He kept his thoughts, his emotions, to himself and for that single display of restraint on his part I shall always remember him as a true descendant of the nobility.

We tramped down the long flights stairs side by side, followed by the superfluous Mr. Saks, who did all of the talking. He was, I think, discourteous on the extraordinary ability of ancient builders, but I am not absolutely certain. I am confident Tarnowsky did not hear a word the fellow said.

error."

Five days later I was snugly ensconced in the ducal suit at the Bristol, overlooking the Kartnerringstrasse, bereft of my baronial possessions, but not at all sorry. My romance had been short lived. It is one thing to write novels about medieval castles and quite another thing to try to write a novel in one of them. I trust I may never again be guilty of such arrant stupidity as to think that an American born citizen can become a feudal baron by virtue of his dollars and cents any more than an American born girl can hope to be a real, dyed in the wool countess or duchess because some one needs the money more than she does. It would be quite as impossible, contrariwise, to transform a noble duke into a plain American citizen, so there you are, even up.

My plans were made. After a fortnight in Vienna I expected to go west to London for the autumn and then back to New York. Strange to relate, I was homesick. Never before had my thoughts turned so restlessly, so wistfully to the haunts of my boyhood days. I began to long for the lights of Broadway (which I had scornfully despised in other days) and the gay peacocking of Fifth avenue at 4 in the afternoon. It seemed to me that nowhere in all the world was life so joyous and blithe and worth while as in "old New York;" nowhere were the theaters so attractive, nowhere such restaurants. Even, in retrospect, the subway looked alluring, and as for the Fifth avenue stages, they were too beautiful for words. Ah, what a builder of unreal things a spell of homesickness may become if one gives it half a chance!

As for Schloss Rothhoefen, I had it on excellent authority no less a person than Conrad Schmick himself that barely had I shaken the dust of the place from myself before the new master put into execution a most extraordinary and incomprehensible plan of reconstruction. In the first place, he gave all the servants two weeks' notice and then began to raze the castle from the bottom upward instead of the other way round, as a sensible person might have been expected to do. He was knocking out the walls in the cellars and digging up the stone floors with splendid disregard for that ominous thing known as a cataclysm. The grave question in the minds of the servants was whether the usual and somewhat mandatory two weeks' notice wouldn't prove a trifle too long after all. In fact, Hawkes, with an inspiration worthy of an office boy, managed to produce a sick grandmother and got away from the place at the end of one week, although having been paid in full for two.

The day on which I left for Paris still saw Tarnowsky at work, with his masons, heroically battering down the walls of the grim old stronghold, and I chuckled to myself. It was quite evident that he hadn't found the hiding place up to that time.

After several days in Paris I took myself off to London. I was expecting letters at Claridge's, where I always take rooms—not because I think it is the best hotel in London, but because I am to some extent a creature of habit. My mother took me to Claridge's when I was a boy, and I saw a wonderful personage at the door, whom I was pleased to call the king. Ever since then I have been going to Claridge's, and while my first king is dead there is one in his place, who bids fair to live long, albeit no one shouts encouragement to him. He wears the most gorgeous buttons I've ever seen.

most insinuating way. He oiled his machine with accusative frequency, but I failed to respond. I was in no mood for writing. He said to me one day:

"I don't see why you keep a secretary, Mr. Smart. I don't begin to earn my salt."

"Salt, Mr. Poopendyke," said I, "is the cheapest thing I know of. Now, if you had said pepper I might pause to reflect. But I am absolutely, inexorably opposed to rating anything on a salt basis. If you?"

"You know what I mean," he said stiffly. "I am of no use to you."

"Ah," said I triumphantly, "but you forget. Who is it that draws the salary checks for yourself and Britton and who keeps the accounts straight? Who, I repeat? Why, you, Mr. Poopendyke. You draw the checks. Isn't that something?"

"If—if I didn't know you so well I wouldn't hesitate to call you a blooming fool, Mr. Smart," said he, but he grinned as he said it.

"But he who hesitates is lost," said I. "This is your chance. Don't let it slip." He looked at me so steadily for a moment that I was in some fear he would not let it slip.

Before I had been in London a week it became perfectly clear to me that I could not stretch my stay out to anything like a period of two months. Indeed, I began to think about booking my passage home inside of two weeks. I was restless, dissatisfied, homesick. On the ninth day I sent Poopendyke to the booking office of the steamship company with instructions to secure passage for the next sailing of the Mauretania, and then lived in a state of positive dread for fear the cou-founded American tourists might have gobbled up all of the cabins. They are always going home it seems to me, and they are always trying to get on a single unfortunate ship. In all my experience abroad I've never known a time when Americans were not tumbling over each other trying to get back to New York in time to catch a certain train for home, wherever that may be. But Poopendyke managed it somehow. He must have resorted to bribery.

CHAPTER XXVI.

I Change Garden Spots.

I AWOKE one morning to find a long and—I was about to say interesting—letter from the countess! It was a very commonplace communication I found on the third incidence that I instructed Britton that very evening to see that my golf clubs were cleaned up and put into good shape for a little practice on a course near London, where I had been put up by an English author, and who was forever dingdonging at me to come out and let him "put it all over me." I went out and bought a new brassie to replace the one destroyed by the experimenting Rocksworth youth, and before I got through with it had a new putter, a niblick and a spoon, neither of which I needed, for the excellent reason that I already possessed a half dozen of each.

Keyed up to a high pitch of enthusiasm, I played golf for ten days and found my friend to be a fine sportsman. Like all Englishmen, he took a beating gracefully, but gave me to understand that he had been having a good deal of trouble with rheumatism or neuritis in his right elbow. On the last day we played he succeeded in bringing me in two down, and I've never seen neuritis dispersed so quickly as it was in his case. I remember distinctly that he complained bitterly of the pain in his elbow when he started out and that he was as fit as a fiddle at the eighteenth hole. He even went so far as to implore me to stay over till the next sailing of the Mauretania.

But I took to the high seas. Mr. Poopendyke cabled to the Homestead at Hot Springs for suitable accommodations. I cannot remember when I had been so forehanded as all that, and I wonder what my secretary thought of me. My habit is to procrastinate.

ONLY TRUE SOURCE OF LIFE ETERNAL

God's Method of Selecting the Church of Christ.

Divine Method of Selecting the Church—Deep Spiritual Truths a Cause of Separation—How We Eat Our Lord's Flesh—The Class
That Drink His Blood—Our Lord's Life Laid Down at Calvary.

Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 12.—Pastor Russell was the principal speaker at the I. B. S. A. Convention, Hershey Park to-day. His text was, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life."—John 6:68.

The setting of the text formed the introduction to the theme. Then the speaker explained God's method of selecting the Church of Christ, as outlined in Scripture. For nearly nineteen centuries God has been gathering a "little flock" out of all nations and denominations. With the close of this Age these faithful ones shall be made like their Lord on the spirit plane, and with Him shall be given great power for the purpose of bringing mankind back to human perfection. Not by pushing, not by thunderings or imprecations, but by the magnet of His Word, passing throughout the world, God has drawn to Himself the class He seeks. These not only make a covenant with Him, but keep it. If they have fleshly weaknesses which they cannot overcome, He makes provision for these. He is looking at the heart, the New Creature.

Eating the Flesh of the Son of Man.

The Pastor explained in detail our Lord's words, "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you." (John 6:68.) Father Adam's life was forfeited because of his disobedience; and all his children thus lost their right to life. Our Lord gave His flesh, His human nature, for Adam and all of his family. He laid down His flesh in order that the Adamic race might have the right to earthly existence. Jesus' new life is not earthly, not fleshly; He has a spirit body now. (1 Peter 3:18.) Therefore He has His fleshly life to give to the world. Never having forfeited His human life, He still has the right to it. But now, glorified on the spirit plane, He will give the merit of His human life to Adam and his race at the end of the Gospel Age.

There is a difference between laying life down and giving it. Our Lord has undertaken to give His human nature for Adam's human nature. Jesus laid down His life at Calvary, but did not then give it. One might lay down a parcel in a store, intending to get it later and give it to one of the clerks. So eighteen hundred years ago Jesus laid down His life. He still has the right to it, but will soon give it up forever, as the offset for Father Adam. Then Divine Justice will turn over Adam and all His race to our Lord, who will take His great power and reign. He will have the right to bless the world for whom He laid down His life at Calvary, when He gave that life to Jehovah.

WINNIPEG GRAIN MARKET.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 27.—Liverpool cables were steadier than expected and with record receipts the bullish sentiment caused by the unfavorable weather condition was held in check. Trading in futures was quiet, the volume of business in this department being light.

Prices held steady at fractionally higher figures than the opening. Winnipeg oats opened unchanged to  $\frac{1}{4}$ c lower, and followed with steady prices. Flax opened 2 to 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ c up and eased off slightly. Barley futures steady. In the cash demand a good business was done.

Inspections 3358 cars, against 983 last year.

Wheat futures closed  $\frac{1}{4}$ c to  $\frac{1}{2}$ c up, cash wheat closed 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ c to 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ c lower, oats closed  $\frac{1}{4}$ c to  $\frac{1}{2}$ c up. Flax closed 2c to 3c higher.

MONTREAL GRAIN MARKET.

MONTREAL, Sept. 27.—There continues to be a fair enquiry from foreign buyers for all grades of Manitoba spring wheat for nearby shipment, and, as cables were stronger at a further advance, in some instances, sales of a few loads were made, but the volume of business doing, on the whole, is small, and the market is quiet. The tone of local market for oats is stronger, and prices advanced  $\frac{1}{4}$ c to  $\frac{1}{2}$ c per bushel, with a fair trade passing in car lots for local account. American

LOUNGING ROBES.

Negligee Frequently Reflects the Mood of the Wearer.

LICENSE IN ITS SELECTION.

Only Rich Can Have Very Fragile Boudoir Frock, but the Woman Who Is Clever With Her Needle May Fashion Her Own.

Negligees are the most "temperamental" of all the garments with which the modern woman avails herself. They reflect every mood of the wearer and are a more direct revelation of the intimate personal tastes than any other type of latter day garb.

Since a woman is proverbially known to have many moods it follows that the designers of boudoir garments have been permitted a great deal of license in the selection of fabrics, colors and lines with which to evolve the airy trifles that bring a suggestion of rest and relaxation to the ultimate possessor. The vast majority of exquisite lounging robes are by no means reasonable in price.

As a matter of fact, their cost is commensurate with their high, artistic beauty, and only the favored relatives of the millionaires are permitted to own the exceedingly delicate creations made of "real" laces and incrustured with hand wrought embroideries, exploiting specimens of amazing needle art.

However, it must not be thought that the woman of average means has been neglected in the all important matter of the negligee. She may make choice of a simple model of cotton stuff with flowered pattern and satin ribbons used to border the front, the neck and the sleeves. The old time kimono, which really wrought a revolution in the tea gown industry, is still with us.

It is no longer considered good taste to wear the latter in crude fabrics or tawdry colors. Now that pretty silks are to be had at reasonable prices the average woman finds it good economy to invest in an attractive negligee that nature for Adam's human nature. Jesus laid down His life at Calvary, but did not then give it. One might lay down a parcel in a store, intending to get it later and give it to one of the clerks. So eighteen hundred years ago Jesus laid down His life. He still has the right to it, but will soon give it up forever, as the offset for Father Adam. Then Divine Justice will turn over Adam and all His race to our Lord, who will take His great power and reign. He will have the right to bless the world for whom He laid down His life at Calvary, when He gave that life to Jehovah.

At the beginning of the Messianic Age all accounts on the books of Justice against Adam and his race will be cancelled, and the great work of blessing mankind will begin. During that time Jesus will give them His flesh to eat, the merits of His sacrifice, that they may take on all those perfect human qualities which He laid down. Throughout the incoming Age mankind will eat His flesh—appropriate the human blessings which He sacrificed for them. Those who build character worthy of everlasting life will receive it at the end of the Age. Those who fail to build character in harmony with the Divine requirements will be cut off as unworthy of everlasting life.

Drinking the Blood of the Son of Man
To the Church are now given by faith the blessings which the world will receive actually by and by. The Church accepts the Divine invitation to leave the world and become New Creatures in Christ, begotten to the spirit nature, and finally to be born of the Spirit—made like our Lord. But before they can do this, Jesus' merit must be imputed to them. That is, the human perfection which mankind will actually receive during the Millennium is imputed, counted, to the Church now by faith. Thus the Church are by faith eating the flesh of the Son of Man.

But the Church are to do more than this. They are to drink His blood—give up their human life, drink of His sacrificial cup. Whoever becomes a joint-sacrificer with Jesus gives up all his rights to the earthly nature. As the Father gave our Lord the higher life, so He has promised that whoever will follow in Jesus' steps will also receive the Heavenly life. The agreement to drink our Lord's blood—to share in His sufferings and death—is the special Covenant which brings us into the family of God.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Sept. 27.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, west end market, in spite of the fact that the supply offered was smaller than a week ago a weaker feeling developed for all classes of beef cattle, prices declining 25c per 100 pounds as compared with last week's rate. The weather was cool and favorable for keeping stock, but notwithstanding this fact there seemed to be little disposition on the part of the buyers to operate freely, even at the reduction in prices noted, consequently there was no snap to the trade and the market was of a sluggish character, but butchers generally were only disposed to buy small lots to fill actual wants, while the demand from packers was also somewhat limited, except for canning stock, which met with a ready sale at steady prices, bulls selling at $4 to $4.35 and cows at $3.25 to $3.50 per 100 pounds. A few loads of choice steers changed hands at $7.50 and good at $7 per 100 pounds, while picked small lots of the former brought $3.75 and the latter $7.25.

There were no further developments in the condition of the market for small meats since this day week. The tone of the market was firm at the advance in prices noted a week ago, owing to the active demand from butchers and packers.

Trade in sheep fairly active, and as the offerings were not in excess of the requirements prices ruled steady.

And Figures Don't Lie.

Johnny came home the other night in high glee, wearing the arithmetic medal.

"What is that for?" asked his mother.

"That's the prize for doing examples," said Johnny. "I did this one: 'If our new baby weighs eleven and a half pounds and gains an ounce each day'—'cause you told Mrs. Smith she did yesterday—'how much will she weigh when she's twenty years old?' And the answer was 466 pounds. And the teacher said I earned the prize."

However, it must not be thought that the woman of average means has been neglected in the all important matter of the negligee. She may make choice of a simple model of cotton stuff with flowered pattern and satin ribbons used to border the front, the neck and the sleeves. The old time kimono, which really wrought a revolution in the tea gown industry, is still with us.

It is no longer considered good taste to wear the latter in crude fabrics or tawdry colors. Now that pretty silks are to be had at reasonable prices the average woman finds it good economy to invest in an attractive peignoir that may be readily cleansed at the dry cleaner's or tubbed after the regulation manner.

In the illustration is shown a kimono which if bought ready made would be rather expressive, but the woman who is clever with her needle may make one for herself at one-half the cost. This is of blue Japanese silk lined with a faint flesh colored silk, and the embroidery is done in pale pink chrysanthemums.

Many women do not feel trim and tidy in the beltless negligee. They make choice of a sort of empire type which is gathered into a high belt and which has the waist line defined by a satin ribbon of some pretty hue. The posing of the waist line is a matter of individual taste. The slim, willowy type of woman likes a low set girdle, but the woman inclined to stoutness insists on a belt.

Midsummer negligees include charming effects evolved in chiffon cloth or voile and made without any lining. In some respects they are very similar to veranda coats of three-quarters or seven-eighths length, with the side seams slashed and bordered all about with braid embroideries or other like garniture. These garments have no collars, and the sleeves are mere extensions of the shoulder.

Happiness.

Money will not procure happiness, but happiness will help procure money. Happiness makes every task a pleasure and every worker optimistic, and an optimistic worker at a pleasant task can perform it in no way but well.

Happiness is not only its own reward, but it is an irresistible magnet which is forever drawing unexpected rewards. And happiness can know no evil; evil happiness is a contradiction of terms. Happiness is a religion in itself.

He who has happiness has jumped just over the very goal of life.—Judge.

GOOD NATURED ELEPHANTS.

Peculiarities of Some of the Herds of West Africa.

In 1905 I found myself near the Inza river, an important affluent of the Kwilu, flowing through a fertile region which is infested by herds of elephants, a source of constant anxiety and frequent losses to the inhabitants.

In a country like this, where he is not hunted by man in the ordinary way and the only means for his destruction are cruel but easily avoided pitfalls, the elephant is decidedly good natured. We were told by the mission boys at Pana that in the rainless season, when their usual haunts are dried up, the elephants frequently wander near the river and attack the plantations. The natives try to drive them away with sticks!

"But it is no good hitting them or throwing stones at them," I was told. "They generally refuse to take any notice. Sometimes a mother with a calf will turn on us and chase us for a hundred yards or so, but no real harm is meant and the animal is not really angry, for all the signs of fury—spread ears and raised trunk—are absent. All the same, we do run away, although we know there is no danger. One day a boy fell when thus pursued, but the elephant only threw sand on him."

As I have myself seen a man just pushed out of the way by one of these good natured monsters, when the animal had more than enough provocation to kill him, I was inclined to accept this account as true.—Wide World Magazine.

Poaching an Egg.

The food value of an egg is enormous, but an invalid tires of eggs served in the ordinary way. Here is a method involving some trouble, but worth it for the sick person's sake. Break an egg into a flat dish of cold water and let it remain covered with muslin for twelve hours. Then pour the water off very gently indeed, so as to prevent the egg going with it. Now poach the latter in boiling water, adding just a tiny pinch of salt. This, nicely served, can be eaten by any one, for it melts in the mouth literally. Two might be cooked, for done in this way one egg is not much.—Buffalo News.

Devilfish.

Devilfish weighing up to 200 pounds are sometimes caught in Japan. These fish are amphibious. They are often seen wabbling on their tentacles like giant spiders in search of patches of sweet potatoes. The natives kill them with clubs. In the water they are caught in jars lowered to the bottom, which the octopus enters, thinking them a good retreat from which to catch its food.

Proverb Didn't Apply.

Mrs. Brown was in the kitchen helping Nora, the cook, prepare supper. "It's an old saying," she remarked to Nora, "that 'too many cooks spoil the broth.' What do you think?" "Sure, mum," she replied, "there's nothing to worry about. There's only one cook here."—National Monthly.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The following prices f.o.b. Ford, Ontario., effective Aug. 2, '15

Ford Runabout . . . . .	$480.00
Ford Touring Car . . . . .	$530.00
Ford Town Car . . . . .	$780.00

No speedometer included in this year's equipment, otherwise cars fully equipped.

There can be no assurance given against an advance in these prices at any time. We guarantee, however, that there will be no reduction in these prices prior to Aug. 1, 1916.

Profit Sharing with Retail Buyers

On August 1, 1914 we made the announcement that if we could make and sell at retail 30,000 Ford cars between August 1, 1914 and August 1, 1915 we would share profits with the retail purchasers. We have sold only 18,774 Ford cars in the time specified and, therefore, are unable to share our profits with those who purchased Ford cars between the above dates.

Our plan to profit-share with retail purchasers of Ford cars during 1914-1915 was not successful due to conditions which we could not possibly foresee at the time we made our announcement last August. The war and the consequent unsettled conditions of business seriously affected our sales and increased our manufacturing costs so that during the last year we did not earn a profit not required for the normal expansion of our business in a manufacturing and service way.

However we still have confidence in our profit-sharing plan, but a realization of the uncertainty of conditions generally makes it advisable to defer any announcement of future profit-sharing until a later date.

We are, however, positive we cannot reduce costs for several months, and therefore can offer no profit-sharing for cars delivered during August, September and October, 1915.
